OPA to Fix Fresh Fruit, Vegetable Prices Soon

'Most-Consumed' Items to Be Affected, Cost of Living Cut Seen for June, July

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Dollar and cents retail prices to be put on "most-consumed" fresh vegetables and fruits in early June were promised consumers yesterday by J. K. Galbraith, Acting Administrator of the Office of Price Administration.

The promise was made to delegates from the New York City Consumer Council and reported at a press conference held by that group in the office of Senator Wagner (Democrat) of New York.

Mildred A. Gutwillig, acting chairman, said the delegates assumed "of course that the new prices will be lower than those now being paid."

OPA officials declared the cost of living index for June and July would reflect a considerable decrease in the prices of foods and asserted the ceilings to be imposed on fresh fish within the next 10 days would mean a cutback in the price of that unrationed commodity.

Meantime, Senator Shipstead (Republican) of Minnesota, attacked the promises of OPA by terming its recent prices on beef a "rollback swindle" that really runs prices up 20 per cent above former levels.

"Take porterhouse and sirloin steak and roast," he told the Senate. "In Washington, D. C., the OPA's 'ceiling' price was jumped from the former price top of 50 to 59 cents a pound up to 66 cents for choice steak at chain stores and 70 cents at smaller independent stores.

"The advertised rollback was really a rollup of 10 to 15 cents a pound. At the same time the average price of porterhouse steak in Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto was 39 cents a pound."

Jenkins Attacks OPA

On another front the OPA was being attacked by Representative Jenkins (Republican) of Ohio, chairman of the Republican Food Study Committee. The price agency, Jenkins said, has been losing face with the public and he is ready to prepare a bill asking its elimination.

The bill will ask that all food problems be placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, he declared.

"We have found that some 10 agencies of the Federal Government are now having direct or indirect control over the production, distribution and price of food. We have direct competition between several agencies in the purchase of food," he said in a statement.

C. I. O. leaders from the Middle West, after several days of conferences with rationing, food, manpower and other war agency officials, declared at a press conference they would "organize block by block," to help OPA put into effect any real attempt at rolling back food prices.

A. E. Glenn of Chicago, vice president for Illinois, said C. I. O. workers wanted the prices put back to the levels of September 15, 1942.

OPA Will Dismiss Some 'Idle' Officials

At least a half-dozen high-ranking OPA officials will be out of the agency within the next week as a result of a determined effort on the part of Price Administrator Prentiss Brown to "get rid of people who have been spending only part of their week here," another official declared last night.

"We have had to go on a 24-hour day and no longer have room for officials who look on OPA as a hobby," he said. "Too many offices have been deserted for the last four Fridays and Saturdays."

Mrs. Randle Convicted of Manslaughter

Annapolis Jury Ignores Demand For Murder Verdict

By Walter Mason
Associated Press Staff Writer

Annapolis, May 20.—A jury of 12 men tonight found Mrs. Helen Aileen Randle guilty of manslaughter in the death of Allen Willey, 17-year-old high school youth.

The jury, which deliberated for 2 hours and 15 minutes, found the third wife of Ulmo S. Randle, well-to-do sportsman, innocent of murder, ignoring the plea of State's Attorney Marvin I. Anderson that she be convicted of first-degree murder.

Mrs. Randle heard their decision with no outward show of emotion.

The court recessed until 9:30 a. m. tomorrow. Chief Judge Ridgely P. Melvin told newspapermen he would sentence the wife of Ulmo S. Randle at 9:30 a. m. Tuesday.

Under the Maryland criminal code, manslaughter conviction carries a prison term of from two to 10 years, or a fine up to $5000, or both.

Defendant Breaks Down

Mrs. Randle, 31, broke down completely several times during her testimony, and tears coursed down her cheeks almost continuously as, in a frequently quivering voice, she declared that she had only intended to frighten the 17-year-old high school boy out of her Bay Ridge home.

The attractive brunette asserted that the bullets which caused Willey's death the next day and sent her wealthy husband, Ulmo S. Randle, 34, to a hospital with a leg wound, were fired during her husband's attempt to wrest from her the small-caliber rifle she had obtained.

Mrs. Randle was called to the stand early in the afternoon session of the second day of her trial in the death of Willey, whom she asserted was consistently insolent to her and "called me the vilest names."

During her testimony, Mrs. Randle was asked to state specifically the names Willey had called her. It was at that point that she first broke down, sobbing:

"I can't, I can't."

After a pause to regain her composure, Mrs. Randle said that her husband, whose horses have won numerous prizes in Maryland and Virginia horse shows, had ordered her from the house during a day-long domestic quarrel.

After Willey appeared, she said, he called her names, and she went out and obtained the gun, returning to the living room where Willey, Randle and Mrs. Leonard R. Stinchcomb, jr., chief prosecution

High-Priced Potatoes Sold From Truck

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

While the OPA yesterday took depositions from customers against black market operators in potatoes, with the prospect of early prosecution, a reporter for The Post bought 10 pounds—at 10 cents a pound—from a truck parked on the apron in front of No. 19 Engine Company of the District Fire Department at Twenty-eighth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, last night.

The man selling the potatoes told the reporter he was employed at the firehouse, yet the truck tags were from West Virginia. The seller said he had gone into the farm country of that State and bought up all the old stock of potatoes he could. He said he had persuaded farmers to dig up their potato kilns to make up the load he had for sale.

Assisting him was a small boy and at the rear of the truck was a platform-type scale, manned by another person, for weighing the spuds.

When the reporter bought the potatoes at 8:40 p. m. the truck appeared to be about one-third full.

The wholesale price of potatoes to retailers now is $3.71 a hundred pounds, or 3¾ cents a pound. The retail mark-up should not be more than 1.28 per cent, which would result in a retail ceiling to consumers of about 5 cents a pound.

The sale of the potatoes was reported to John L. Laskey, chief of the OPA enforcement counsel in Washington. Accompanied by a precinct detective, he went to the scene but found the potato salesman had left with his truck.

Earlier in the day Laskey, working with the United States District Attorney's office, started proceedings which, it is hoped, will result in the arrest of "a considerable group" of District merchants against whom complaints were filed yesterday.

Working with Laskey were John B. Diamond and Ray L. Jenkins, assistants to the district attorney.

All during the afternoon streams of persons poured into the office to file complaints of overcharging in the purchase of potatoes.

Their deputations were taken and the requests for warrants against the merchants involved were prepared. The attorneys said they hoped the warrants would be signed today and service will be started immediately.

The maximum penalty that can be fixed under the law is a $5000 fine and one year in jail.

A Post reporter who had been investigating the black market conditions here filed a sworn statement of facts as he had found them.

In the meantime a spokesman for the Arlington OPA announced that Samuel Shanker, operator of the Country Gardens Markets of Arlington and Alexandria, had

Tax Conferees Likely to Form Compromise

Walsh Declares Willingness to Drop 100% Ruml Support

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Threat of a conference deadlock on the embattled pay-as-you-go tax issue appeared to be evaporating last night, and one member, Senator Walsh (Democrat) of Massachusetts, disclosed that he will abandon previous support for the 100 per cent Ruml skip-a-year plan to help get "the best compromise I can."

Walsh was one of two Senate Democrats among the conferees who voted consistently on the floor and in the Finance Committee to obtain legislation abating one year's liability for everyone. The second, Senator Clark (Democrat) of Missouri, who helped lead a bi-partisan coalition to 49-30 victory for the Ruml plan, made clear that he still favors that, and not a compromise "at this time."

Looked To for Lead

While admitting that the votes of Walsh and Clark would not be decisive, some members of the conference looked to them to furnish the first lead toward what choice might be made between some compromise plan and a stalemate.

Walsh said that he would accept some flat percentage of abatement of a year's tax, ranging from 50 to 80 per cent, with two or three years' carryover of the unabated portion, and with the same percentage of abatement in all the tax brackets.

The 50 per cent abatement was said to have had the lion's share of the conversation in a closed session of the joint conference yesterday afternoon. The first session was held yesterday morning. The third will be at 10 a. m. today, and members voiced hope that an agreement might be reached by this evening.

Senator George (Democrat) of Georgia, Finance Committee chairman, is pressing for agreement on abating 75 per cent of the 1942 or 1943 liability, whichever is low-

More Troops Rushed to Flood Area

Death Toll Stands At 10 With 28,000 Homeless; Property Damage 30 Millions

By the United Press

An exodus from a stretch of territory along the menacing Mississippi was under way last night as fresh troops were rushed to hold levee lines against rising rivers.

Illinois, southern Indiana and Oklahoma were chief danger areas in the six-State Midwestern flood area which approached or exceeded record levels.

Already more than 28,000 persons were homeless. Crop and property damage was calculated at more than 30 million dollars. Field work in many farm regions was at a standstill. The death list stood at 10.

Missouri Pours Overland

The Missouri River broke from its channel in St. Charles County, Mo., and poured overland to meet the overflow of the Mississippi near West Alton, Mo.

The Midwestern area office of the Red Cross in St. Louis said latest information was that flood conditions would be increasingly severe in Illinois counties along the Mississippi below St. Louis within the next 24 hours. The Illinois River, meantime, was reported at levee peak from Peoria south.

Red Cross officials said that in the inundated acreage in Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas and Oklahoma 20,812 families were affected and 16,602 persons were being cared for in 48 shelters.

Evacuation warnings were issued for Fort Chartres, Stringtown, Icy Landing and Grand Tower, Ill.

A military force and volunteers labored to build up the river wall at Beardstown, Ill., where the Illinois River inched up to 26.6 feet, an all-time peak, and a little more than a foot from the top of the dike.

Approximately 1000 additional Illinoisans evacuated. Half of the 500 homes in the Richland sector Peoria were abandoned.

28,000 Homeless

Official and unofficial observers figured 12,000 were homeless in Indiana, 11,000 in Illinois, and more than 5000 in eastern Oklahoma.

A record-shattering crest of 47.5 to 49 feet was forecast for Muskogee, Okla., where the Arkansas River flood is 28 feet 2 inches. The Army moved 1800 from two threatened towns.

The Verdigris River levee broke at Coffeyville, Kans., driving 2000 persons to higher ground.

The inundation kept 5000 miners idle in the Kansas-Missouri-Oklahoma region.

Conditions improved, and many factories resumed operations, in northern and central Indiana, but levee breaks sent the Wabash gushing across thousands of acres in the Terre Haute vicinity and over 22,000 acres around Vincennes.

Tractors Idle

Gas Shortage Brings Crisis In Output of War-Vital Food

A crisis in food production because of gasoline shortages was reported from Virginia northward yesterday as Government agencies continued emergency gasoline meetings under growing possibilities that further driving restrictions may be necessary.

The War Food Administration reported that thousands of tractors stand idle in a large part of the Northeast area at a time when every day's delay, even though crops are ultimately planted, means reduction in yield.

"There is only a brief period for planting some crops and if the situation is not relieved soon," the food administration stated, "some of the land intended for crops this year will not be planted until next year. Delay or failure to plant will most seriously affect vegetable production, and indirectly, poultry and dairy products through reductions of feed crops."

The shortage here, however, was relieved to a small degree yesterday when three barge loads of gasoline arrived. Two of the barges were towed from Richmond, Va., by the tugboat Aladdin and were docked at the Standard Oil Co. wharf, South Capitol and R Streets, with a cargo of 18,000 barrels. The gasoline was transferred to shore tanks as fast as it could be pumped out. The trip from Richmond took 42 hours.

As to the growing seriousness of the general gasoline situation, Petroleum Administrator for War Harold L. Ickes told his press conference that further restrictions will be necessary before this crisis is over.

Ickes pointed out that fast depleting gasoline stocks were given a serious blow when the Arkansas flood washed away a section of a newly built 24-inch pipeline, causing the East to lose an equivalent of 200,000 barrels of gasoline shipments a day.

When asked whether further gasoline restrictions could mean temporary abandonment of A ration cards, the petroleum administrator declined specific comment, but stated vehemently that "there should be no unessential driving and there is still a lot of it going on."

Ickes said the gasoline shortage shows little prospect of improving for many weeks, despite an all-time record movement of oil overland during the week ended May 15.

The administrator disclosed that there actually is barely enough gasoline for truly essential uses on the East Coast. Continuing military demands and the Arkansas flood, he pointed out, will keep the situation critical for some weeks.

At the same time, following up yesterday's ban on pleasure driving by Price Administrator Prentiss M. Brown, the Office of Defense Transportation announced that the ban applies to drive yourself cars as well as to private passenger automobiles.

Persons hiring rental cars will have to sign agreements stating that the drive yourself vehicles

Trapped Japs Battered, Attu Victory Seen Near; Spain Mutiny Reported

Sailors Declared To Have Destroyed Arsenal and Sunk Nazi Cruiser, Sub

Reports of a mutiny in the Spanish navy which has resulted in destruction of the Spanish naval arsenal at El Ferrol and the sinking of "some warships" in the same harbor were current in Government circles last night.

The reports, based on information possessed by exiled Spanish republican leaders in Mexico City, have the following highlights:

About May 6, when Axis capitulation in Tunisia was imminent, Premier Franco of Spain ordered half the Spanish fleet based at El Ferrol to the Canary Islands in the Atlantic, the other half to the Balearic Islands in the Mediterranean.

Ships Reported Seized

Spanish seamen mutinied upon receipt of the order, took over several ships and torpedoed a German cruiser and sank several German submarines.

A landing party of Spanish marines blew up the El Ferrol arsenal. (A Berlin broadcast May 14 mentioned a big fire in the arsenal.)

Coastal artillery fired on the ships and sank some of them.

Some of the Spanish seamen escaped to Portugal.

Another report is that crews of two Spanish tankers scuttled their vessels on this side of the Atlantic about the same time that the action at El Ferrol is supposed to have taken place.

That all was not normal at El Ferrol was emphasized yesterday by the Berlin radio in a broadcast recorded by the Federal Communications Commission and reported by the Associated Press. The radio, quoting a German news agency D. N. B. dispatch, said that a new naval arsenal at the Atlantic port "has been destroyed by fire."

6 Cruisers in Fleet

From available information, Spain is listed as having 7 cruisers, one being of 10,000 tons; 19 destroyers, including 4 purchased from Italy; 6 gunboats; 11 torpedo boats 13 submarines; 2 minelayers; 6 coast guard craft, and a number of miscellaneous vessels.

The 1940 Jane's Fighting Ships, authoritative guide to the world's navies, puts the Spanish fleet personnel as 950 officers and 21,350 enlisted men.

The merchant marine is reported to consist of approximately 900 ships, with a gross tonnage of 1,074,845.

Senate Confirms Lear Promotion Overwhelmingly

Maj. Gen. Ben Lear, whose punishment of 350 soldier "yoo-hooers" two years ago started a national controversy, yesterday was confirmed by the Senate for the temporary grade of lieutenant general.

Lear's nomination was confirmed only after a brisk Senate skirmish in which Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), of Missouri denounced the acting chief of the Army Ground Forces as "unfit to hold that high rank."

A half dozen Senators swiftly rose to Lear's defense, and on the voice vote that followed Clark shouted the lone "no."

Senator Clark charged that Lear in the "yoo-hoo" incident, had violated the Articles of War by punishing the innocent along with the guilty without advising them they could be tried instead by court-martial.

Doolittle's Airmen Wreck 73 Axis Planes

Win Air Battles To Blast Sicily, Sardinia Bases

By Noland Norgaard
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, May 20.—Maj. Gen. James H. Doolittle's strategic air force announced today the destruction of 73 enemy planes during heavy raids yesterday on Italy's anti-invasion outposts of Sicily and Sardinia. The Allied cost was four aircraft.

This 18 for 1 victory took a tremendous bite out of hurriedly assembled Axis air strength on the two islands, and was the most sweeping since German and Italian airmen were chased from the Tunisian skies just before the enemy army's collapse in North Africa.

Twenty-nine planes were shot down in bitter dogfights ranging from sea level to 24,000 feet, and 44 others were blasted to bits on airfields on the two islands.

For the first time since the fall of Tunisia German and Italian airmen rose in great strength, but failed to ward off the Allied raiders whose explosives ripped apart airport buildings and set fires amid parked aircraft.

37 Planes Destroyed

The biggest blow was dealt by Flying Fortresses. Sailing over Milo Airfield near Trapani on the western side of Sicily, the big bombers destroyed 37 parked planes and blanketed the field and installations with bombs.

Then 50 Axis fighters jumped the Fortresses and their escorting Lightnings. Ten of these enemy planes were shot down and at least three others were damaged in a 20-minute running battle which raged out over the sea toward the Egadi Islands.

Among the Axis victims sent spinning into the sea were Messerschmitt 109s, Focke-Wulf 190s and Macchi 200s. Official sources described the engagement as "several long and gruelling dogfights," and one returning airman said:

"Everyone was mixed up, and it seemed as though each P-38 (Lightning) had a Messerschmitt on its tail and another P-38 shooting it off."

The southern and central Sardinian targets attacked were Monserrato, Elmas Airfield, Cagliari

Backs to Sea

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Remnants of the Japanese garrison on Attu Island, penned up along the bleak shores of Chichagof Harbor, are being relentlessly crushed under a series of smashing American attacks from the land, sea and air, official reports disclosed last night.

The end of enemy resistance seemed close at hand, as clearing skies favored offensive operations on the remote Aleutian Island.

Sharp fighting, however, was under way, and officials said that even heavier conflict could be expected before the situation is cleaned up.

The airfield which the Nipponese were building already is in American hands, Secretary of War Stimson announced. Once completed by our Army Air Force Engineers, it will give the United States an airbase 2300 miles from Tokyo and about 700 miles from the important enemy base at Paramushiru in the Kurile Islands just south of Kamchatka.

Pass Captured

Latest reports from Attu disclose that our troops, revealed yesterday to be under command of Maj. Gen. Eugene M. Landrum on Wednesday captured important Sarana Pass, eastern gateway to the Chichagof Harbor area through the formidable ridge which crosses the island from east to west.

General Landrum is a native of Pensacola, Fla., and served six years as an enlisted man in the regular army before he was commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry in 1916. Later he served in Hawaii and the Philippines and spent a year with the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia.

Earlier, our troops took the main pass in the Holtz Bay area which leads to the enemy positions in the Chichagof Harbor area from the west. Gunfire from light American naval forces helped clear this pass, the Navy revealed.

Through these passes Landrum's men are attacking the Japs cornered in the 6-mile wide peninsula formed by Holtz Bay and Sarana Bay at the northeastern end of the island. Only a few scattered troops are believed to be elsewhere on the 20 by 35 mile island.

Army Planes Attack

The dense fog which made it almost impossible for our troops to receive air support evidently has lessened somewhat, for yesterday's Navy communique told of a bombing attack by our Army planes on the Jap positions.

Given a favorable break in the weather, military men here believe the enemy resistance can be crushed perhaps within two or three days.

Secretary Stimson, viewing the Attu campaign yesterday, declared that Landrum's forces were "making satisfactory progress" under the difficult conditions and bad

Tickets to War Bond Ball Game Now Available at The Post

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Heeding the increased demand for tickets to the war-bond baseball game at Griffith Stadium on Monday night, The Post, starting today, will make reserved seats available at ticket windows in the lobby of The Post Building.

Exchange tickets for the game between the Nats and the Norfolk sailor team, issued to bond purchasers at the city's banks and postoffices, may now be converted into reserved seats either at The Post Building or at the Griffith Stadium box offices.

The Post ticket windows will be open daily from noon to 8 p. m., including Sunday. The booths will be in charge of the members of the AWVS—the American Women's Voluntary Services.

The sale of tickets to the game has been considerably stimulated during the past few days by announcements that America's No. 1 male and female radio stars, Bing Crosby and Kate Smith, would be features on the game program at Griffith Stadium.

From home plate at the Stadium, Crosby will sing the songs that have made him America's most popular male vocalist. Kate Smith, who occupies a rating parallel to Crosby's among women singers, will make one of her famous bond appeals from home plate.

Admission to the game is limited to buyers of bonds, who are entitled to receive exchange tickets with their purchases at any bank or postoffice in Washington. For this game, The Post has adopted the

They'll Use Dirty Tricks

Unit of 'Goose-Steppers' Formed To Get Yanks Mad at Germans

By the Associated Press

Fort Knox, Ky., May 20.—A platoon of goose-stepping, German-speaking, "dirty-tricking" soldiers dressed in Nazi uniforms is being organized at the armored force replacement training center here to make life miserable for trainees in Uncle Sam's tank outfits.

Maj. Willard Bass of Los Angeles, Calif., commander of the battle training department, said, "The mission of the 'Germans' is to make the soldiers so mad at the Nazis they will be anxious for combat."

The "Nazi" platoon will operate all over the battle training area of this huge Army reservation and will capture as many trainees as possible, using all "the dirty tricks" its members can concoct.

The captured trainees will be interned for an indefinite period in "Shickelgruber's Pokey," a large "concentration camp" surrounded by a 16-foot barbed wire fence. They will be subjected to all kinds of hard labor and "insults."

It's all for the good of the trainees and it may save many lives, Major Bass explained. It is designed to make soldiers realize they must be alert so they will not be killed or captured by real Nazis.

The "Nazi" platoon is under the command of Lieut. Seymour Steinberg of Staten Island, N. Y., who speaks German fluently. The drill master is Corpl. Charles Pinka of Manchester, Conn., who spent many years in Germany and other European countries as a student. All members of the platoon will receive orders in German and will be able to hurl insults at their captives in that language.

The platoons' equipment as well as its uniforms will bear the Nazi insignia.

British Return From 3-Month Raid in Burma

By Preston Grover
Associated Press Staff Writer

A British Base on the Indo-Burma Frontier, May 18 (Delayed). A super-raid by British and provincial troops that for three months swept through northern Burma on a 300-mile front, wrecking railroads and bridges and generally harassing Japanese occupation forces, drew near its close today as the weary raiders, many of them disease-ridden, struggled out of the jungle.

(The Burma campaign was officially declared ended in a special war communique issued early Friday morning in New Delhi.)

For three months this fighting force of English, Burmese, Indians and jungle tribesmen marched through the jungle, bobbing up everywhere from Mandalay northward to Myitkyin to pester the Japanese, while not a word of their exploits was allowed to reach the world.

The raid was an epic struggle against the jungle, with death, valor, despair and victory alongside.

Matched Wits and Won

Fighting side by side with their heat-tempered, brown-skinned comrades, a regiment of England's city-bred tinkers, tilers and bookkeepers matched their wits against the Japanese and the jungle and won—not decisively, but won.

Several columns traveled nearly 1000 miles and endured the bitterest hardships.

The raid began February 15 when a force of whom a third were English crossed the Chindwin River on the Burma side of the frontier.

It was led by Brig. Charles Orde Wingate, 39, the same man who at the beginning of the Ethiopian campaign three years ago led 2000 Sudanese and 1000 Ethiopian warriors in operations that resulted in the capture or disposal of 40,000 Italians.

Sevenfold Task

Before the troops returned many trying weeks later from Burma they were convinced they had accomplished a sevenfold task:

They had destroyed several bridges and had blown up 100 miles of railroad in 70 different places.

They had delayed a Japanese move against the Chindwin River barrier near the Indo-Burma frontier.

They had taken the pressure off the Chinese to the north.

They had saved 5000 loyal native warriors by compelling the Japanese to withdraw their punitive expedition for use against the raiders.

They had destroyed the Japanese feeling of security in Burma.

They had received invaluable training in jungle warfare.

They had proved Wingate's contention that quick training could make Allied troops equal to the jungle and the Japanese.

The raiders entered the jungle with nearly 1000 mules loaded with supplies. But once they reached central Burma the bulk of their supplies were dropped to them by a small squadron of American-built planes operated by British crews.

U. S. Increases Assault on Japs In Burma Sector

New Delhi, India, May 20 (U.P.).—American airmen have increased their assaults on the Japanese in Burma.

American Liberator crews dropped a new record total of more than 125 tons of bombs on Japanese installations along the Irrawaddy River yesterday, surpassing Tuesday's record of more than 100 tons. All the planes participating in the two days of consecutive attacks returned to their bases.

Six targets were attacked yesterday by the Americans, including workshops and oil installations, over a 150-mile front in south central Burma.

10 Norwegians Die

6 Troop-Laden Nazi Barges Sunk by Reds

By the Associated Press

London (Friday), May 21.—The Russians today announced an attempt by the Germans to move troops by water in the vicinity of the Kerch Strait between the Caucasus and the Crimea, without indicating immediately whether the Nazis were attempting to reinforce their narrow Caucasus bridgehead about Novorossisk, or evacuate forces from it.

The Soviet midnight communique as recorded by the Soviet monitor here said that ships of the Red fleet and planes sank six self-propelled barges "carrying enemy troops."

At the same time the Russians reported what may have been yet another attempt of the besieged Germans to break out of their Novorossisk trap by land. The midnight communique said on one sector northeast of the big port Germans attempted to attack Soviet positions with four infantry regiments, striking out after heavy artillery and mortar preparations.

The late bulletin reported that "the enemy suffered heavy losses and was thrown back."

The Germans also might have been attacking to relieve the Russian pressure on the Novorossisk position, which had been increasing steadily for months and at a stepped up tempo in recent weeks.

There was no indication of the numbers of troops involved in the barge movement. If large, this Caucasus Front, which was the first of the many Eastern Front sectors to be dried of spring mud, may be ready for heavy action.

Both Sides Ready

With both sides acknowledged to be ready for a big offensive, the direction of this barge movement might give a tip-off as to which army was going to strike first.

The Berlin radio described the Russians as moving onto the offensive in this sector and also near Izyum in the middle Donets sector and in the Lisichansk and Sevsk areas still farther north. The Berlin radio also reported the launching of sharp Soviet attacks on German lines in the Staraya Russia Front near Lake Ilmen.

Stalin Gets Roosevelt Note From Davies

By the Associated Press

Moscow, May 20.—Joseph E. Davies handed President Roosevelt's secret message to Premier Marshal Joseph Stalin in the Kremlin early tonight.

The President's special envoy delivered the letter after spending some time with Soviet Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov at the end of an airplane flight from the United States.

Davies was disclosed to have used the same four-motored plane in which the President flew to Casablanca last January for that Allied conference.

Contents of Note

(Transmission of the message followed by a day British Prime Minister Churchill's statement in Washington Wednesday that he and the President "earnestly hope that at no distant date we may be able to achieve what we have so long sought—namely, a meeting with Marshal Stalin and if possible with Generalissimo Chiang Kaishek."

(President Roosevelt said early this month that only he and his secretary-typist were aware of the contents of the note to Stalin, and declined to say whether a reply was expected. Davies, he said, presumably would become acquainted with the contents of the letter after its delivery, would discuss them with Stalin, and then return home.)

Extensive Press Attention

The Russian press gave generous space to the arrival of Davies, who has not seen Moscow since he left his Ambassador post five year ago. But there was no speculation about his mission here.

The former Ambassador gave a statement to the Russian press which was prominently displayed. In it he praised Russia's "wonderful resistance to the Huns."

Davies added that Germany's defeat is "as evident as the fact that after night comes day."

Shackled Captain Reported Left on Scuttled Boat

Recife, Brazil, May 20 (AP).—The sinking of the 9300-ton Greek ship Edifots by a submarine while en route from Buenos Aires to North Africa on May 1 was reported here today.

Reports were current that the captive captain of a Greek ship, probably the master of the Edifots, had been manacled inside a U-boat and carried down with it when the German crew scuttled their boat off Brazil early this month.

The merchant captain was reported taken prisoner when his vessel was sunk by a raider.

Persons who talked with captured U-boat crew members who are still in Recife said the prisoners knew nothing of the Axis defeat in North Africa and stubbornly refused to believe there had been a rout in Tunisia.

Eighteen survivors of the Edifots reached Fernando Noronha in one lifeboat, while two boats containing the remaining 19 crew members are missing.

War Sidelights

Churchill Concerned About Raids

By the Associated Press

New York, May 20.—Mrs. Roosevelt disclosed today that Prime Minister Churchill was concerned about antiaircraft protection during a recent motor trip with the President near Washington.

She related this incident to a convocation of City College of New York students:

"My husband and I were driving with the Prime Minister out from Washington to a place where they planned to spend the night. The Prime Minister asked if there was any antiaircraft protection.

"'Why no,' the President answered, 'it's just a camp and can hardly be seen from the air.'"

"The Prime Minister said 'Anywhere I go in Great Britain they take antiaircraft protection with me.' He paused a minute and then said, 'But in Great Britain there is no place more than 15 minutes away from the enemy.'"

New Type Hara-kiri

Kearney Mesa, Calif., May 20 (AP). Japanese fliers may be committing suicide by ridding themselves of their parachutes as they float toward earth, says Lieut. Thomas W. Furlow, a Marine flier who has seen action off Guadalcanal and won the Distinguished Flying Cross.

"They'd bail out of their burning planes at about 6000 feet, which was not unusual," Furlow told a Marine Corps combat correspondent. "But, at about 5000 feet, they'd unbuckle the parachute harness and simply jump out. We couldn't understand it unless it was a new kind of hara-kiri."

Berlin Reports 72 Ships Reaching Port of Gibraltar

By the Associated Press

The Berlin radio, obviously seeking information, reported yesterday that 72 ships, including the British aircraft carriers Argus and Formidable and the battleships Nelson and King George V were in the port of Gibraltar.

The report, attributed to Spanish correspondents, said that 25 of the ships arrived yesterday morning from the direction of the Mediterranean and that one American and two British merchant ships were damaged. A British destroyer also was damaged, it was reported.

The fleet included tankers, merchantmen and transport vessels, the battleships and aircraft carriers, 22 cruisers, 18 British destroyers and some American destroyers, the broadcast said.

Eden Boosts Move to Bomb Axis From War

By the Associated Press

London, May 20.—Pondering over the possibility of bombing the Axis into unconditional surrender was stirred to a new pitch today by Prime Minister Churchill's expressed willingness to try it experimentally and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's immediate responsive enthusiasm.

The determination to scourge the Axis from the air was keynoted today by Eden in an address to a conservative party conference in which he hailed Churchill as "the greatest Englishman of our time," and said the Prime Minister's visit to the United States will "bring lasting gain to the Allied cause."

Then, responding to the suggestion by Churchill in his speech to the American Congress yesterday, Eden said the Axis would be bombed not only around the clock but around the map. He said the bomber command still was gathering strength and noted the growing effect of American daylight bombings.

Ceaseless Bombing

"It would be a waste of time for us to argue which is better, night or day bombing," he said. "We know what is best for Germany—bombing by day and night, ceaselessly and continuously, hour by hour, until the war is won. That is the program we have prepared for Germany.

"Nor will Mussolini be forgotten."

One air enthusiast said unqualifiedly that "both Germany and Italy could be bombed out in 1943."

"Fifty raids a month for two months, each unloading 2000 tons of bombs on the enemy, would turn the trick," this air-minded commentator said. "This would mean stepping up by four times what we have been doing."

Questions Effectiveness

Countering this view, another source asserted there were too many "ifs" involved.

"One big question mark is the human element," he said. "There is no yardstick by which you can measure human endurance.

"Knowing the German psychology, I doubt that you could bomb the Nazis into surrender. Knowing the Italian psychology, I believe they could be.

"As the Prime Minister says, it's worth trying to knock off the Huns and Eyties with bombs. But I'd say the proof is in the pudding."

One informant, pointing to the Axis collapse in North Africa under terrific air pounding, remarked that it was troops which had to be defeated to finish off the Axis in that theater.

"That seems to me to hold true on the continent," he added.

"Get some air bases on the continent and then we can see what will happen."

Lurking Units of 'Mosquitos' Shake Nazis

By Edward D. Ball
Associated Press Staff Writer

A Mosquito Intruder Base in Britain (Friday), May 21.—Reichsmarshal Goering is keeping his bombers at home partly because of the morale-shaking ague diagnosed at this station as "mosquito fever."

R. A. F. Mosquito pilots who lurk over the continent night after night to ambush Nazi raiders returning home say there are multiple signs that this nervous strain is spreading throughout the German air force.

"The work of our intruders on enemy morale is unmistakable," said Wing Commander Charles Douglas Tomalin, vetern Mosquito nightrider who was an Olympic high-diving competitor in 1936.

"You'd get the jitters, too," he added, "if you saw your own planes coming down in flames over your own airdrome. The Hun simply won't take his bombers out when he knows we're around."

Since the R. A. F. went into action with the Mosquito intruders, its newest and most sensational weapon, the Nazis now send over Britain small bomb-lugging Focke-Wulfs instead of bombers—usually by ones and twos—because they can outrun the Mosquitos. The damage they do is trivial in comparison with what Germany is taking, but they make headlines in Berlin.

"Even if we fail to get a Hun every night out we are making them keep their bombers at home," Tomalin said. "Another thing we've accomplished—the enemy is moving some of his fields back in an effort to get out of our reach.

"There are a lot of other Mosquito bases just like this one scattered around the country and we've got plenty of planes to take care of the Germans if they want to start mass bomber raids again."

21 Jap Planes Attack 4 Bases In New Guinea

By Vern Haugland
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Friday), May 21 (AP).—The Japanese air force kept up its offensive against New Guinea Wednesday night and yesterday by sending 21 planes against four Allied bases, bringing to nearly 250 the number of planes used in raids within a week's period.

While the enemy was distributing his attention among Port Moresby, Milne Bay, Dobodura (near Buna) and Cape Ward Hunt, the Allies concentrated their air efforts against an airdrome at Rabaul, New Britain, where 18 tons of bombs were dropped.

Twelve enemy planes strafed the Douglas harbor area to the northwest of Buna and sank a small Allied lugger.

Today's noon communique reported the most widespread activity of the Japanese airforce since it opened a series of stabs last Friday by sending 45 planes against Oro Bay, New Guinea, losing 22.

The net day it sent more than 100 planes against Bobdubi, Wau and Buna, New Guinea.

May 17, a total of 43 more planes raided Wau and the following day 25 others.

Allied planes also sped along the shores of the Huon Peninsula of New Guinea on strafing activities, forcing two "laden" barges ashore and setting one afire. In the Huon Gulf, near Salamaua, enemy installations along the Francisco River were fired by attack planes and bombers attacked Salamaua's airdrome and town areas.

R.A.F. Bombers Raid Berlin For Fourth Time Within Week

By the Associated Press

London, May 20.—On the heels of the United States Flying Fortress raids on submarine and shipbuilding yards at Kiel and Flensburg, the Royal Air Force last night carried the Allied air offensive to Berlin for the fourth attack on the Reich capital in a week.

An Air Ministry communique said today that swift R. A. F. Mosquitoes attacked targets in Berlin, but gave no details. Tonight the Air Ministry news service reported that seven trains on railways between Challons-sur-Marne and Nancy, France, were shot up by a single Mosquito during R. A. F. sorties over occupied territory last night.

So costly have been the R. A. F. attacks on hard-pressed Axis railroads that the enemy has put flak cars behind the engines on most munitions trains.

Germans Beaten Off

All the Mosquito planes returned, and later, during daylight, a big formation of Allied aircraft thundered over the Channel toward northern France. They were too high to determine whether they were fighters or bombers.

Meanwhile, German planes, in another feeble attempt by the enemy to strike back at England, neared a south coast town, but they were greeted by a fierce anti-aircraft barrage and scurried off before they could drop any bombs.

In night sorties along the coast of Europe from the Netherlands to southern France, Whirlwind bombers of the R. A. F. attacked enemy air bases at Poix, Amiens-Glisy and Crecy en Penthieu. They also made raids on rail targets at Gamaches and Eu.

A concentration of barges in the Ghent region became the victims of strafing by Mosquitoes which also shot up a factory at Tangerbrugge.

An alert was sounded in London tonight for the fifth consecutive night—but the all clear sounded after an interval during which neither enemy planes nor gunfire were heard.

In London, observers held that the recent enemy stabs at the capital, although not effectual, might be a forerunner of a final punch at Britain from the air.

Air observers took with a grain of salt a Berlin radio statement that the raids were merely reconnaissance flights preparatory to a determined attack, but they acknowlegde that the Nazis still had sufficient air strength to cause plenty of damage.

Roosevelt, Mackenzie King, Churchill Survey Pacific War

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill of Britain and Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada surveyed with members of the Pacific War Council yesterday all the aspects of the world war, and one member said afterward that the picture looked "optimistic."

There was no evidence, however, that the President or Churchill disclosed any specific plans they may have for new blows against Japan.

Discussion of the war in the Pacific apparently was in the most general terms, and the British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, pointed out that "as always, one of the main elements in the problem stands out: "Shipping."

Serving on the council are representatives of all the United Nations actively engaged in the war in the Pacific. Yesterday's meeting took place against the background of Churchill's speech to Congress Wednesday in which he pledged his country to fight Japan while there is breath or blood in the bodies of Englishmen.

Soong's Reaction

When Dr. T. V. Soong, Chinese Foreign Minister, was asked whether he felt more optimistic about the Pacific situation in the light of that address, he answered: "I wish I could tell you."

It was Dr. Alexander Loudon, Netherlands Ambassador to the United States, who said the overall picture of the war looked optimistic.

Council members said they had reviewed the war situation generally and its effect on Pacific operations.

"We traveled everywhere, as far as the Pacific is concerned, from the Aleutians south," said Leighton McCarthy, Canadian Minsiter to this country.

"Wider Look Around"

Halifax was asked whether the council took "any special look into the future," and he asserted that the past, present and future all were examined, with the council getting "a wider look around" than usual because of the presence of the two prime ministers.

Byrd Presents Liquidation Plan for HOLC

A two-year plan for liquidating the Home Owners Loan Corporation and making the Government withdraw from the field of real estate credit was presented to Congress yesterday by the joint economy committee headed by Senator Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia.

In a report issued as the Senate prepared to act early next week on whether to liquidate the agency in two years or one as sought by the House, the Byrd committee joined with the Senate Appropriations Committee in opposing the one-year liquidation program. It recommended:

1. That the HOLC completely liquidate all of its holdings by June 30, 1945, and that the liquidation be guaranteed by Congress.

2. That the HOLC during the next two years and two months conduct an intensive campaign among their mortgagors and lessees "to induce them to increase their equity in their homes, to buy them outright, or to transfer their loans to a local home-financing institution."

The Byrd committee report praised the HOLC administration, but said the Federal Government should act as quickly to withdraw from the real estate operations, in a time of prosperity, as it moved to help American home owners in the depression.

Beall, Honor Student in D.C., Killed in Africa

Twenty-two-year-old Capt. John Paull Beall, an honor graduate of Georgetown University, who landed with the first invasion forces, gave his life in the fight to drive the Germans out of North Africa.

BEALL

Capt. Beall's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John C. W. Beall of 5475 Nebraska Avenue have been notified of his death by the War Department, it was learned yesterday.

In 1941 Captain Beall was graduated as the honor student of the ROTC at Georgetown. He was one of the fewer than 50 students in the United States to be commissioned in the regular Army upon graduation. He won the Father O'Leary Cup for excellence in military science.

The young officer was a member of a well-known family that has lived in Washington for several generations. He graduated, also as an honor student, from Western High School, in 1937.

After graduating from the rifle and heavy weapons company Officers' Course at Fort Benning, Ga., Beall ecame the youngest company commander in the Ninth Division. He was assigned to Fort Bragg, N. C., before going overseas in 1942. He first went to Ireland and then to North Africa where he landed Novemer 8 on the Algerian coast with the first invasion forces.

Italian Appeals Blocked by Censor, Antonini Declares

New York, May 20 (AP).—Luigi Antonini, chairman of the Italian American Labor Council, asserted today that a reference of his in a short-wave broadcast to Italy questioning the sincerity of Spanish Generalissimo Franco's recent peace plea was eliminated by the censor.

Antonini said also that he had been advised by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia that the censor blocked an appeal by the mayor in a recent short-wave broadcast to Italy urging Italians to overthrow the Fascist regime.

Strikes Close Three Chrysler War Factories

By the Associated Press

Detroit, May 20.—Three war plants of Chrysler Corp. employing approximately 14,500 persons were closed down in a wave of strikes today and a corporation authority expressed fear that all 85,000 Chrysler workers in the country might be affected.

With leaders claiming that collective bargaining had "completely broken down," 4000 members of the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers walked out at the Kercheval and Jefferson plants, and within two hours were joined by 3500 employes at the Dodge main plant.

The latter walkout forced the closing of the Dodge plant, employing 10,500 men on its day shift, a Chrysler spokesman said.

A union statement charged the strikes were a result of "agitation" by the management and constituted a "spontaneous demonstration." The company spokesman insisted that the strikes were planned and "undoubtedly authorized" by the union.

A dispute over a new company-union contract to replace an agreement which expired last November is in the hands of the War Labor Board. The strikes affected Chrysler's production of medium bomber planes, antiaircraft guns, tank engines and other war material.

The Chrysler spokesman said that the Kercheval and Jefferson plants fabricate parts for every weapon made by Chrysler, and warned, "If this strike is not settled, the corporation's entire force of 85,000 workers throughout the United States will face layoff." Chrysler has nine plants in Detroit.

NO BETTER WHISKEY IN THE WORLD

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Can Davies Arrange Roosevelt-Stalin Meeting?

INSIDERS believe that if Ambassador Joe Davies, on his current mission to Moscow, is able to persuade Stalin to sit down for a confab with Roosevelt, he will be a miracle worker.

The Russian Premier has been about as leery of conferring with the President as John L. Lewis is of sitting down with the War Labor Board. In some respects, their attitude is similar.

According to the diplomatic grapevine, Stalin figures that a conference with the President means a substitute for a Second Front in France. He sees only one reason for the President of the United States wanting to talk to him, namely to explain why a Second Front can't be started in France. And he would much rather have the Second Front than a few hours of conversation, delightful as it might be.

Several weeks ago United States Ambassador Admiral Standley went to Moscow from Kuibyshev to invite Stalin to confer with FDR. But he couldn't even get to see Stalin. After cooling his heels for some time, he got word through Foreign Minister Molotoff that Stalin was too busy fighting the war.

Nevertheless, the White House is hoping that Joe Davies may be able to perform the miracle.

NOTE: Last summer another high-up United States visitor told Stalin that the United States was determined to start a Second Front in France. Stalin's reply was: "Yes, if the Britwill let you." (Stalin is not interested in a Second Front in the Balkans, which he feels would take too long and would enter Russia's sphere of influence. He is interested only in a front across the English Channel.)

The Secretary of War

SECRETARY OF War Stimson, now nearing his seventy-sixth year, is not the energetic man he used to be, but he has one quality for which there is no substitute—character. Stimson's character sticks out all over him—his fairness, his determination, his sense of honor.

However, he remains sensitive about his age. Some time ago several of his friends and associates were discussing the qualifications of gaunt, gray Bernard Baruch as possible chief of the War Production Board. Undersecretary of War Patterson was urging Baruch as the ideal man, so were Gen. Somervell and Ferdinand Eberstadt, late of WPB. However, WPB Vice Chairman Charles E. Wilson objected.

"Baruch is a great man," he said. "He has contributed some fine things to winning the war. But he's too old."

"Hmphhh!" snorted Stimson, "he's three years younger than I am."

'Darlan' for Italy

PRO-DEMOCRATIC Italo-Americans are worried sick over repeated leaks that the President and his State Department appeasers are planning to set up an Italian "Darlan" in Rome.

Rumor around the State Department for some time has had it that when M-day arrived in Italy, Count Dino Grandi would be dressed up in new anti-Fascist clothes and made the leader of Italy. Working with him would be Crown Prince Umberto, never sympathetic with Mussolini, and possibly Il Duce's son-in-law, Count Ciano, who has fallen from favor with the Nazis.

If true, such plans would cause a lot of heartaches among pro-democratic Italians as well as the nationals of other occupied countries who really take the Four Freedoms and the Atlantic Charter at their face value.

Capital Chaff

ONE FACTOR behind Senator Bennett Clark's blocking of Gen. Ben (Yohoo) Lear's promotion is that Lear tried to retire Maj. Gen. Ralph E. Truman, cousin of Missouri's Senator Truman. General Truman and Senator Clark both were Missouri National Guard officers in the last war. In this war, General Truman was stationed at Camp Robinson, Ark., but General Lear demands his retirement for age to inactive status. General Truman has protested. Senator Clark is now blocking General Lear's promotion. . . . Latest Republican slogan: "For President—John Bricker. For Vice President—Eddie Rickenbacker. Brick and Rick will turn the trick." . . . This summer Judge Thurman Arnold will go back to Laramie, Wyo., of which he was once mayor, for the first time since he started trust-busting. . . . Washington's other vigorous citizen from Laramie is Maritime Commission Chairman Admiral Land, cousin of Lindbergh. . . . Sage old Josephus Daniels, former Secretary of the Navy, observes, apropos of the house on R Street, that one wise man in the last year was Admiral Sam McGowan, paymaster general of the Navy, who executed billions in contracts, but never accepted a single invitation to dinner.

MacArthur's Communiques

WHEN Col. Larry Lehrbas, press aide to General MacArthur, returned to Washington recently he dropped in to visit old cronies at the State Department pressroom. Lehrbas has had a meteoric career, first as a cameraman in China, later as an Associated Press reporter covering the State and War Departments. There he met MacArthur, later became his press adviser.

The former reporter explained that MacArthur's communiques, considered by the War Department to be the most "unusual" of any military commander, were first written by Lehrbas or one of the press officers and then sent up to MacArthur.

"However, MacArthur usually rewrites them," Lehrbas explained. "Once he got the boys together and read a statement which he intended issuing to the press.

"'What do you think,' he asked, 'are those words too flamboyant? You know there are some people back in Washington who think I'm too theatrical.'"

Civil Air Heroes

Recently the Merry-Go-Round published a column on the Civil Air Patrol. Here is a postscript.

Several Army pilots in the Gulf area recently received Distinguished Service Medals for flying 200 hours over the ocean on antisubmarine patrol. These Army fliers have the best equipment Uncle Sam could provide.

Pilots of Civil Air Patrol doing the same type of work are operating old one-engined planes. There are 15 men who have done 300 hours and several have done 600. But they do not get Distinguished Service Medals.

Morrison Takes Pearson Charge of Profit to House

Representative James Morrison (Democrat) of Louisiana yesterday carried to the House floor his charge that Columnist Drew Pearson "lied" when he told the Military Affairs Committee that an unnamed individual reported the Congressman expected to profit personally from attempted sale of two boilers by a constituent.

Morrison demanded Military Affairs Chairman May (Democrat) of Kentucky make public the name of the reported informant, which Pearson handed to May in confidence at a hearing Monday. When Morrison said this would be done if May were "honest," the latter demanded that the words be "taken down," a preliminary to erasing them from the record. Morrison withdrew the remark, and their argument was stricken from the record.

Morrison said he had an affidavit from his constituent saying the Congressman was not to profit from the attempted boiler sale, and another from John Monroe of 2101 R Street, saying he was not involved in the transaction.

Rationing Curb Removed From Used Inner Tubes

Used passenger car and truck inner tubes yesterday were removed from rationing restrictions.

The Office of Price Administration said it removed used tubes from rationing to encourage the use of about 765,000 used passenger tubes and 225,000 truck tubes now idle in dealers' stocks.

In another order, OPA sought to increase the flow of tires to dealers. It authorized dealers who need larger inventories to meet customer's requirements, to obtain supplies and pay for them later with rationing certificates. In the past, dealers have been able to obtain tires only to the extent of their certificates.

Stamp 18 Good For Pair of Shoes; Valid on June 16

Stamp No. 18 in Ration Book No. 1 will become good June 16 for the purchase of one pair of shoes, but the Office of Price Administration has not yet decided the period for which it will be valid.

OPA said, however, that present indications are that the shoes available for release to civilians will make it possible to maintain the same basis as the first shoe rationing period. Stamp No. 17, the first for shoe rationing, became valid February 7 and is good through June 15.

Each member of a family has one stamp No. 18 interchangeable among the family living in the same household.

WAAC Increase To 375,000 Sought

Plans to increase the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps to 375,000 members were disclosed yesterday in President Roosevelt's request to Congress for new Army funds.

If these plans materialize, about 300,000 more American women are going to get out of gingham and into khaki before the war is over.

The present authorized strength of the WAACS is 150,000, but their actual recruited strength is but 60,000.

58% of Small Manufacturers Serving War

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Staff Writer

Fifty-eight per cent of the Nation's small manufacturing concerns are directly or indirectly engaged in war production, OWI reported yesterday following a survey which also indicated that half of the small manufacturers expect business to be as good or better this year than last.

The survey was undertaken at the request of War and Navy Departments, Maritime Commission, and WPB to determine to what extent small manufacturers were being used in war production and to sound out opinions regarding distribution of war business, long a subject of controversy on Capitol Hill.

Of the 42 per cent not directly or indirectly in war production, OWI found that about one-quarter have been unable to get war contracts and the rest have not tried to get contracts because they either had enough civilian business or their products could not be fitted into the war picture.

Can Increase Production

Personal interviews with officials representing 3446 single-plant manufacturing firms in all sections showed:

1. One-third of the plants felt that they could increase general industrial production with existing equipment and under present conditions. One-half said they could do so with existing equipment if given enough labor and materials.
2. Only part of the available idle capacity is suitable for war production.
3. Half the small manufacturers expect as good or better business than in 1942, and two-thirds expressed satisfaction with their present backlog of orders.
4. Fourteen per cent indicated they wanted additional war business to offset declines in civilian production. These firms, however, were found to be relatively unfavorable for war production.
5. Firms which have been unsuccessful in their efforts to get war business constituted only 11 per cent of the total.

Labor and materials shortages were found to be two major problems confronting the businessmen, whereas lack of war orders was found to be the primary problem of only 19 per cent of the firms surveyed.

Too Much Red Tape

Principal complaints by small business executives were: Large firms getting more than their share, too much red tape getting war business, getting the run-around from some Federal agencies, insufficient time after announcement of warwork for preparing bids, and prime contractors are unfair in the distribution of subcontracts as they subcontract only the difficult and unprofitable parts of the job or the "crumbs."

Col. Robert W. Johnson, chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, praised the survey, stressing that it disclosed that distress is not widespread but where it exists, it is acute.

"Now that we know the problem is managable," he declared, "it makes it possible to solve it with the cooperation of the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission, WPB, and prime contractors and thus to carry out the will of Congress."

will not be used in violation of any Government regulation, ODT said.

In the District, OPA officials said enforcement of the reintroduced pleasure driving ban will be handled in the beginning through mail to prevent burdening local ration boards excessively.

Motorists charged with pleasure or nonessential driving will be questioned first by mail. Upon filling in form questionnaires, the motorist will then be called before local ration boards for disposition of his case.

been cited "on an accumulation of complaints" of price ceiling violations by the OPA.

As a result a suspension order hearing has been ordered about the first of June, the exact date not yet having been set.

Recently a reporter from The Post bought two pounds of potatoes from the Open Air Country Garden Market, in Washington, for 25 cents.

Action taken by the district attorney's office yesterday presaged the first direct steps taken in the District against black market operations, it was revealed.

As a consequence, attorneys said they would have to undertake a thorough study of the law involved and make certain of just what they would be required to prove.

Laskey said the OPA was handicapped in its investigations of black markets and in securing evidence because it is forbidden to use any of their appropriation for purchases on the market.

"This means the only way we can take these cases into court is to have the housewife, or other purchaser, make a complaint to us," he explained. "For this reason I want to urge any person who is overcharged for any article to get in touch with my office."

With a small dribble of legal potatoes continuing to come into the city and prosecutions of illegal operators looming, the black market in potatoes appeared to be on the way out.

One carload of Alabama potatoes came into the city yesterday.

weather encountered. Besides the fog, very cold weather has prevailed. The operations, he said, are under naval direction though the fighting ashore is under Army control.

He said that the American casualties reported thus far "have been relatively light," though it is probable that "some rather sharp fighting, with heavier casualties," may occur before victory is achieved.

Japanese broadcasts during the day admitted heavy casualties by their own forces, but claimed that our losses also had been heavy. The enemy radio report—beamed to the United States and in English—was said to cover the first two days of the landing.

Large quantities of Japanese supplies have been captured, including guns and ammunition in good condition, Stimson disclosed. One entire antiaircraft battery was taken intact and is now being used for horizonal fire against the enemy.

The equipment probably was captured in the Holtz Bay area by American forces under Col. Frank L. Culin, jr., who lead the troops which landed on the northern shores of Attu. The main Jap positions were located there, including the partially completed bomber landing field.

Transit Labor Accord Possible

A possible adjustment was foreseen yesterday in the recent charges that the Capital Transit Co. is guilty of discriminating against Negro labor.

Representatives of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, the area WMC office, the management and labor representatives of the transit company are scheduled to hold an informal meeting this afternoon at 3 o'clock, Lawrence W. Cramer, executive secretary of the FEPC announced.

The meeting is to be held in the area WMC office in the Rochambeau Apartment Building, 815 Connecticut Avenue.

Harbor, Milas Airfield, and Villacidro.

Opposition was intense at these points, too, but American Marauder and Mitchell bombers and Warhawk fighters shot down 18 enemy fighters, scored direct hits on at least 6 grounded planes at Milas Airfield, and planted bombs in the dispersal areas at Villacidro where approximately 50 grounded planes were observed.

A lone Beaufighter patrolling the eastern Sadinian coast meanwhile encountered five torpedo-carrying Junkers 88's, destroying one, probably destroying a second, and damaging a third.

The Italian high command in a communique broadcast by Rome claimed 14 Allied planes were destroyed during the attacks.

Axis planes were said to have torpedoed and probably sunk two medium-sized Allied ships off the Algerian coast and heavily damaged a third 10,000-ton vessel. The ports of Sfax, Tunisia, and Oran, Algeria, also were said to have been "effectively attacked by Axis bombers."

Progress Reported

Senator George declared that there was "nothing to report except progress," after one day of conferences, while Ways and Means Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina said that "no motions were made, no votes taken, we're getting along as well as can be expected."

The Georgian revealed that the Treasury Department, anticipating enactment of the payroll withholding collection system, had ordered 120 carloads of paper for the necessary forms. George started into the conference with the warning that unless an agreement were reached within a few days, he would be prepared to abandon pay-as-you-go taxation for this session, but at the end he voiced optimism that a compromise could be reached. He said he hoped for action today and observed that the "spirit is one of compromise, I am very hopeful."

House Republicans were understood to be ready to "talk business" on the George proposal, but one of them said that there would be no tax bill if the percentage of abatement dropped below 75 per cent.

Commander Berry Promoted by Navy To Rank of Captain

Promotion of Comdr. Robert W. Berry, deputy director of the office of Navy Public Relations, to the rank of captain was disclosed yesterday by the Navy Department.

BERRY

Berry, a veteran submarine officer has served here since March, 1940, when he reported from sea duty to become Navy press relations officer. He became assistant public relations director in 1941 and deputy chief later.

A native of New York City, Berry enlisted in the Marines in 1914 at the age of 15. He served in the campaign against Haitian bandits in 1915-16 and in 1917 became one of the first marines to be appointed to the Naval Academy.

During the last war Berry saw active service as midshipman on the battleship Wisconsin, and after graduation from Annapolis in 1921 was detailed to the battleship Nevada. He became a submarine officer in 1925.

With his wife and daughter, he lives at 1017 South Oakcrest Road, Arlington, though his home is in Honolulu.

12 Die as Plane Hits Gas Tank

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 20.—A B-24 Army bomber rammed into the world's largest illuminating gas storage tank today with a burst of flame that transformed the gigantic structure into a roaring funeral pyre for the 12 aboard.

The 500-foot tank, surmounted by a 50-foot air beacon, was destroyed in an inferno so intense that authorities feared the bodies in the wreckage never would be recovered.

The four-engined Liberator bomber left the Fort Worth, Tex., Army air field this morning on a routine flight. Witnesses saw it flying low from the northwest, skimming over buildings on the Southwest Side. It rose slightly, then crashed into the side of the 20-million-cubic-foot tank.

Shortly after the crash the flames had burned the tank down so low that the hole in its side could not be seen. The front section of the bomber pierced the steel side of the tank and sections of the wings and tail were scattered throughout the enclosure around it.

One body, strapped into a parachute, was thrown free as the plane struck. It was found, burned to a crisp, just outside the tank.

The tank, which cost two million dollars when it was built in 1928, is situated in a sparsely settled area. Nearest homes are a quarter mile away, yet in one the heat of the fire became so unbearable the children were moved to other quarters.

Officials of the Fort Worth field said the names of the victims would be announced after their survivors had been notified.

Max Constant Killed

Los Angeles, May 20 (AP).—Max Constant, internationally known racing and testing pilot, has been killed in the crash of a plane on an experimental flight, a spokesman for Northrop Aviation Corp. said today.

Constant, born in France, became interested in aviation in England after the first World War, and came to the United States in 1935 to fly Jacqueline Cochrane's plane in the ninth annual New York City-Miami race. He won the race in 5 hours 43 minutes and 39 seconds.

59½ Billions Asked In Funds for Army

23 Billions Requested for Air Corps Alone; House Passes $29,463,687,000 Navy Bill

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday asked Congress for an all time peak of $59,425,586,500 in Army appropriations for the next fiscal year, with the record bulk earmarked for a $23,655,481,000 Army Air Corps.

The new War Department estimates, exceeding current Army appropriations by $16,605,580,134, reached the Capitol as the House unanimously passed the largest money bill in naval history—$29,463,687,000 to wage war in both oceans through the spring of next year.

Said Appropriations Chairman Clarence Cannon: "The Navy's job ahead is tremendous, and it must be provided with every essential to make its accomplishment less difficult and absolutely sure and decisive."

Both of the big war supply bills reflected the decision of the Anglo-American Washington military conference to try, if possible, to bomb the Axis into submission—an experiment Prime Minister Winston Churchill said was well worth trying.

Funds asked for aviation alone in the new Army bill were nearly double this year's $12,338,582,080 outlay. Stephen Early, White House Secretary, said the Army next year would build 1,147,000,000 pounds of planes, exclusive of engine weight, compared with 911 million pounds this fiscal year, and more than the combined output of all other nations.

Aviation similarly was heavily underlined in the new Navy bill. For naval aircraft, the House voted $4,583,725,000 in direct appropriations and another two billion dollars in contract authority.

Biggest Single Item

Largest single item in the House-approved Navy bill was a $9,118,120,000 appropriation (plus $2,779,880,000 in contract authority) for fighting vessels and auxiliary and landing craft to be used in invasion operations. While the House was approving the appropriation, the Senate completed action on an authorization for one million more tons of landing boats. A House-passed bill for one million additional tons of auxiliary vessels was amended by the Senate and returned to the House for final action.

In addition to the ceiling Army budget, the President asked Congress to make available next year for Army use $12,472,913,200 of current unobligated balances. Together with the $29,463,687,198 Navy appropriation, the 1944 War Department estimates carry total military appropriations since July 1, 1940, to more than 330 billion dollars.

Much of the increase reflected in both Navy and Army bills covered pay and subsistence costs of the Nation's expanding armed forces, scheduled to reach 11 million men at the end of this calendar year.

Chairman Cannon said it was impossible to say whether the peak of war appropriations has yet been reached: "Present indications do not point to much contraction, if any, prior to the fiscal year of 1946."

The new Army bill, more than six billion dollars over the President's January budget estimates, was broken down as follows:

Pay and travel	$12,305,686,000
Subsistence	2,487,641,000
Clothing and equipage	1,894,038,000
Transportation	1,556,839,000
Signal Corps	4,658,896,000
Air force	23,655,481,000
Medical department	455,119,000
Engineer service	2,576,404,000
Ordnance department	8,038,925,000
Chemical warfare service	342,260,000
Manufacturing plant facilities	749,000,000
Miscellaneous fund	705,302,500

Council Asks Restaurant Price Freeze

Immediate freezing of District restaurant prices at their level in May, 1942, was urged in a resolution released yesterday by Joseph D. Phillips, president of the Washington Industrial Union Council of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Asserting that requests for such freezing to the District Office of Price Administration and to the OPA regional office had met with no results, Phillips said:

"Recent directives from Prentiss Brown (OPA chief) rolling back prices and establishing ceiling prices have been a step forward in implementing the President's hold-the-line order. The majority of Federal employes in the District, however, eat in restaurants, and do not benefit as much from these directives as the rest of the country. A roll-back and freezing of restaurant prices in the District is an integral part of price stabilization in this area."

Copies of the resolution were sent to the President, Food Administrator Chester Davis, Director of Economic Stabilization James B. Byrnes, and Brown.

Manslaughter Verdict Found By Jury in Mrs. Randle's Case

witness, were seated on a divan.

Randle seized the gun, she continued, and attempted to wrest it from her. She said the weapon was "held loosely in my hand. . . . I never intended to use the gun. I never brought it to my shoulder."

During the struggle, she added, the shots were fired. Mrs. Randle said that the scuffle over the weapon apparently resulted in recocking the rifle after the first shot was fired, and that as it continued, the second bullet was discharged.

Earlier in the day, Mrs. Stinchcomb had said that Randle asserted his wife was "the Naval Academy prostitute" prior to their marriage, and that Willey seconded the reference, adding, "Mr. Randle, shall I get those pictures and show them to her?"

Mrs. Stinchcomb also testified that the quarrel between Randle and his wife began about 9 a. m. and that Mrs. Randle repeatedly called her husband various profane names, and in one exchange referred to him as a "sexual maniac," after he asserted she was infected with a venereal disease.

Threatened Divorce

Mrs. Randle herself told the jury that on that day she told her husband: "U. S. I've got to get a divorce unless you stop this treatment."

Mrs. Randle told that she was afraid Willey would "beat me up again" as she said he had done on one occasion during a visit to Richmond, Va. She ordered the youth out of the house, but he refused to go.

Then she related that young Willey called her a prostitute and said, "and furthermore, I have pictures to prove it." When she went out to get the gun, Mrs. Randle related, "everything went black."

When she returned to the living room, gun in hand, the witness said, "Mr. Randle sprang at me with his eyes all bloodshot and his hands like claws. My heart jumped into my mouth . . ."

Demonstrates to Jury

At this point, she jumped up and demonstrated to the jury what she meant by the manner in which Randle leaped.

"My finger must have tightened on the trigger," she continued. "Mr. Randle seized the gun and pulled it this way and that and in the struggle the gun must have been cocked, for it went off again.

"The Willey boy got up and I thought that he was going home, as he should have done long before, but he said, 'I'm shot.' I said, 'you're joking. Where?' He was holding his side . . . I went to the kitchen and got an ice bag and administered first aid to the boy.

"And that's the true story, gentlemen. I have nothing to hide."

The court upheld defense objections to testimony by Mrs. Grace Boswell of Washington, Mrs. Randle's mother, and her father, with reference to her reputation for chastity prior to her marriage in December, 1940. The court held that was not the issue.

Mrs. Randle said she eloped with Randle because her parents objected strenuously to the match.

Court of Appeals Upsets 3% Accord Of Defunct Bank

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday reversed a District Court decision which had upheld a plan under which depositors of the defunct United States Savings Bank would receive 3 per cent interest on paid up deposit claims while others would get interest amounting to 12.55 per cent on claims.

In the original decision, written by Justice Matthew F. McGuire, 2000 of the bank's approximately 7000 depositors had assigned over all interest above 3 per cent that might be due them to a receiver's and shareholders' committee of the bank.

In the opinion written by Associate Justice Henry W. Edgerton it was stated:

"Depositors who preferred to accept 3 per cent in order to avoid litigation would hardly have agreed to accept 3 per cent if they had known others were to get 12.55 per cent and still avoid litigation. We think the agreement is invalid and should be set aside."

Admiral Wiley Dies at 75

Admiral Henry Ariosto Wiley, 78, retired naval officer, who formerly was commander of the United States Fleet, died yesterday at Palm Beach, Fla.

Admiral Wiley, who lived at 1870 Wyoming Avenue Northwest, was commander of the fleet with the rank of full admiral from 1927 until his retirement in September, 1929, after 46 years of service. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal for "exceptionally meritorious service" for his work as captain of the U. S. S. Wyoming.

Born at Troy, Ala., January 31, 1867, Wiley was graduated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1888. He served aboard the U. S. S. Maple during the Spanish American War.

Wiley attained the rank of captain in 1915, and served at various time as commander of the Battleships New Jersey and Wyoming. During 1918 he served with the Sixth Battle Squadron of the British Grand Fleet.

Appointed rear admiral in 1918, he became commander of destroyers with the Pacific Fleet in 1919. He became a vice admiral in 1923.

In 1936, he was appointed a member of the Maritime Commission for a four-year term. When the United States began large scale preparation for war and Navy construction at a maximum pace, Wiley was recalled from the retired list to active duty with the Navy Department and made chairman of the Navy Board for Production Awards. That was his last assignment prior to his death.

Claudio Arrau, Anton Torello Aid Budapest String Quartet

Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress presents the Budapest String Quartet (Josef Roismann, Alexander Schneider, Boris Kroyt and Mischa Schneider) on Thursday night in Coolidge Auditorium. Assisting artists: Claudio Arrau, piano, and Anton Torello, double bass. Program: Piano quartet in G minor, K. V. 478 (Mozart), Quintet in G major, Op. 77 (Dvorak), Piano Quintet in A major, Op. 114 (Schubert).

Making their antepenultimate appearance of the season in Coolidge Auditorium last evening, the members of the Budapest String Quartet had as assisting artists Claudie Arrau, distinguished Chilean pianist, and Anton Torello, first double bass of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The program, which will be repeated tonight with the certainty of another capacity audience, brought forward two works of the standard repertoire by Mozart and Schubert and a third extracted from the less frequently heard compositions of Dvorak.

BROWN

Senor Arrau's local debut was made in the Mozart G minor piano quartet and the Schubert A major piano quintet in which he employed a crisp touch and a facile technique. His playing was perhaps a trifle too sturdy for the style of Mozart, although that is a matter of taste about which there can be endless dispute. In the Schubert quintet he was accommodatingly romantic and his reading had a more plastic quality.

Both of Mozart's piano quartets have the air of being occasional pieces planned more for a soiree than for a thoughtful audience. The G minor contains a few dramatic moments which seem to be reflexes from his operatic preoccupations at the time of the writing, but for the most part the music flows lightly and makes few demands upon the attention.

Dvorak's string quintet gets a hearing only when a quartet can find as skilled and consentient a double bass player as Anton Torello, who can draw lyric tones from the instrument. Abounding in melodies and Czech impetuousity, the work is continuously attractive, even in its passages of commonplace thought.

Thanks to his own habit of revising works and to the arbitrary actions of Simrock, his principal publisher, Dvorak left his list of works in confusion. It is impossible to tell from an opus number where a particular composition belongs chronologically. This string quintet was written early in 1876 and would normally have been Opus 18, but Simrock did not publish it until 1888, and then numbered it Opus 77. In the meantime it had been frequently performed and attained popularity.

Schubert's "Trout" quintet, delightfully played by the ensemble, was as enjoyable an ending for a concert as one could ask. The music is motivated by poesy throughout with no intrusions of practical disillusionments or personal sorrows. It has a quality of reverie even in its most vehement moments.

A.F.L. Indorses Disobedience To Six States' Antilabor Laws

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor yesterday indorsed a recommendation by its president, William Green, to disobey antilabor laws passed in six States until a court test can be obtained declaring them unconstitutional.

Green told reporters that a similar stand would be taken by the federation with respect to the Smith-Connally bill pending in Congress if it were passed in a form judged to be unconstitutional by the legal staff of the A. F. of L.

The executive council charged in a statement that the laws in the six States—Kansas, South Dakota, Idaho, Texas, Arkansas and Colorado—were inspired by "reactionary groups, notably the Christian American Association" as "part of a sinister and underhanded attempt by Fascist influences in America to tear the trade union movement apart and to smash the political and economic strength of America's workers."

Liberty League Policy

A reporter recalled that the American Liberty League had been subject to considerable criticism in the early days of the New Deal when it advised American industry to refuse to obey the Wagner Act on the ground that it believed it unconstitutional. Green said that he did not think the comparison appropriate as the Wagner Act was found constitutional later "while this legislation is so clearly unconstitutional."

Green said that Joseph Padway, general counsel of the A. F. of L., had suggested the course of action to the council.

In response to a question, Green said that he "suspected" that Senator W. Lee O'Daniel (Democrat) of Texas and sponsor of numerous antilabor measures was one of the sponsors of the so-called "Christian American Association" which he said originated in Houston.

Green said that he had not yet selected the personnel of a committee to consider the application of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, for readmission of the U. M. W. However, labor sources generally agreed that the U. M. W. would be readmitted.

It was pointed out in some A. F. of L. circles that Lewis was able to make the proposal because of the stalled character of C. I. O.-A. F. of L. "peace" negotiations. However, there was speculation that some elements in the A. F. of L. might invite "middle of the road" C. I. O. unions—including the steelworkers, autoworkers and textiles—to join the federation at the same time to prevent Lewis from moving into a position of dominance in the A. F. of L.

C. I. O. Absorption Unlikely

Any move to absorb the whole C. I. O., including those dominated by Communists, seemed unlikely, however.

Green told reporters that Sir William Beveridge had appeared before the council and described his social security plan which he predicted would be accepted by the British Parliament.

A social security program now being drawn by the A. F. of L. will be completed within a few days for introduction into Congress, Green said.

Bad Weather Gives Impetus To Subsidies

While adverse weather reports spread gloom among "Washington farmers," the House Banking and Currency Committee yesterday continued its hearings on a bill to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corp., and Congressmen tried to make up their minds on the question of subsidies as a means of controlling food prices.

Although opposed to the subsidy idea, some of Capitol Hill's leaders see it as "maybe the only way to meet the serious food situation." With flood conditions prevailing in several upper Mississippi Valley States and planting generally delayed by abnormally low spring temperatures, they are not so vehement in their subsidy protests as they were when "incentive payments" were up a few weks ago.

War Food Administrator Chester C. Davis yesterday reiterated his hope that the CCC's request for additional money powers would not be labeled an appeal for subsidies. "When a label is applied to a whole program, it is unfortunate," he said, expressing his conviction that such "easy" cataloguing generally fails to present the correct picture and leads to false conclusions. "Nobody called it a subsidy," he said, "when the CCC was placing loans on cotton and wheat."

Subsidies and Inflation

Subsidies, in whatever light they are viewed, cannot control an inflation brought on by excess spending power, the WFA head declared. This excess must be drained off before it gets into circulation. The way that is done is not so important as the fact it must be done," he said.

J. B. Hutson, president of the Commodity Credit Corp., yesterday told the House committee his agency was more concerned with "stabilizing prices under wartime conditions than holding prices up or down."

During the past two years, he said, CCC loans and purchases have totaled about four billion dollars, with losses of less than 25 million dollars. He said that during the coming year losses in relation to volume probably would not be as large as during the first eight years of CCC's existence, when losses of about 172 million dollars resulted from loans and purchases of about two billion dollars.

Still in Opposition

Meantime, Ed O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said his group next week would appear before the committee to express "its continued opposition to all subsidies."

"We're just as much against this new plan proposed by the President and Jimmy Byrnes as we were to the incentive payments. We are opposed to the rollback of food prices because we know it will roll back on the farmer. Let them roll back wages.

"The best control of inflation is taxes and everybody knows it.

"The enormous cost of distribution of food does not make sense to the farmer. It's pretty hard for him to be for rolling back prices when he is getting 17 cents a pound for meat that later shows up as 75-cents-a-pound steak."

Group to Meet On Water Gate Concert Plans

The National Symphony Orchestra Association will meet today to complete plans for 17 "Sunset Symphonies" at the Water Gate this summer and will discuss problems facing the orchestra because of failure to reach its $115,000 sustaining fund goal.

Beginning with a grand opening concert on Sunday evening, June 13, the Water Gate concerts will continue on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday evenings through Wednesday, July 21, J. P. Hayes, manager of the orchestra, disclosed. Hans Kindler will conduct and negotiations are now under way with some of the world's great performers and conductors.

At least four of the concerts will be "Special Events," Hayes said. These will be concerts at which the guest conductor artist will be of the top bracket and prices will be raised accordingly.

However, a low price ticket policy will prevail, he stated.

Output in Danger

Aircraft Men Demand Materials

Charles E. Wilson, executive vice chairman of the War Production Board, has been advised by the aircraft industry that present increasing aircraft production schedules cannot be maintained through August and September unless there is a better job of distributing scarce materials.

The aircraft industry, speaking through its newly formed National Aircraft War Production Council, has informed Wilson that maldistribution of aluminum extrusions and forgings has become a serious problem, jeopardizing future production.

The industry was said to have acknowledged that part of the responsibility for this situation must rest with itself, but contended that the War Production Board and the armed services also have fallen down with their part of the job.

For Tight Scheduling

The industry is advocating a program of tight scheduling of materials all the way along the line to the finished product—controls which would be tighter than the War Production Board's touted controlled materials plan.

Frameworks for such a program will be established within the new aircraft production control system which Wilson announced it is planned to install shortly, it was said. This new control system will be set up at Wright Field, Ohio, with the Aircraft Scheduling Unit, a joint WPB-armed services enterprise. It will be headed up by an advisory committee composed of three representatives of the aircraft industry, three of the aluminum producing industry, and three of the aircraft scheduling unit.

Through it, under the industry's plans, necessary information on the distribution of materials will flow into Wright Field from the industry. Adequate information on how much of an item is needed is not now available to the Government without inquiry, it was said.

Have Failed to Jibe

In addition, scheules of requirements for finished planes and data on the supply of materials available have not always lined up.

BOEING FLYING FORTRESSES

were delivered in 1942 as in 1941

YOU ARE BOEING'S SOLE CUSTOMER

Today the Boeing Airplane Company has just one customer — you!

The entire output of the large Boeing plants—in Seattle and Renton, Wash. — Wichita, Kans. — and Vancouver, B. C. — goes to the fighting forces of the United Nations.

You have a direct and personal stake in every Flying Fortress we build, in every one you read about in the headlines. You also have a stake in the famous PT-17 Kaydet Trainers, in which more pilots, both Army and Navy, have received their primary training than in any other airplane.

Because we are working solely for your Government, every dollar we use in producing airplanes to win the war comes from your taxes and purchase of War Bonds. Therefore, this statement is Boeing's Report to You on how your money has been used in your behalf — to help preserve for you the right to live in freedom from bondage.

It is with pleasure we submit this report to you:

1. Last year, Boeing delivered more than 8 times as many Flying Fortresses* as were delivered the previous year. Even in these times, that is a creditable record — particularly when you realize that the great majority of all U. S. four-engine bombers in operation in 1941 were built by Boeing!

2. At the same time, we reduced our manufacturing costs so that we have returned to the Government in cash or have agreed to return $35,689,426.30 of your money. These savings for you were made possible through improved methods and facilities, and the loyal co-operation of our many employees.

3. In addition to this sum, Boeing's federal, state and local taxes for 1942 equaled approximately $35,884,405.54 —making a grand total of $71,573,831.84 being returned to the Government for the year.

How Was Your Money Spent?

In 1942, Boeing received $390,322,738.72 for its products.

Taking the gross income received (after deducting savings turned back to the Government applicable to the year) at 100%, the division for the year reveals some interesting facts. Approximately 60% went directly to vendors and subcontractors for materials and parts. Boeing set the pace in aiding small businesses in this way. Next highest item was wages to employees — 27.7% of the total, or almost 69% of all expenditures except to vendors and subcontractors.

What about Earnings?

Did the fact that Boeing was able to deliver 8 times as many Flying Fortresses in 1942 as in 1941 mean a similar increase in net earnings? Here are the figures:

Boeing sales in 1941 totaled $97,210,000 . . . net earnings for that year were $6,113,000.

Boeing sales in 1942 quadrupled to $390,323,000 . . . while net earnings dropped to $5,238,000.

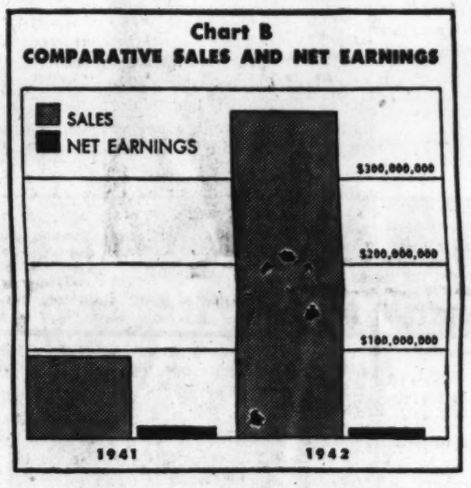
COMPARATIVE SALES AND NET EARNINGS



Dividends and Wages

Under the American system, any business is made up of two things: investment and work.

The people supply the money which makes possible the buildings, machinery, research, and so forth.

The people also supply the manpower and management for doing the work.

The average income during 1942 to people supplying the money was at the rate of $1 per share of stock, or an average of $57 per stockholder.

The average income to employees was $2420.

Lower Manufacturing Costs Achieved

Boeing is proud of its record in consistently reducing for you the manufacturing costs on the Flying Fortress and other Boeing products during 1942.

There was a substantial decrease from former years in the man-hours per pound of finished product, indicating the increased efficiency of the company's manufacturing operations.

Boeing's rate of production is, in fact, the highest of any company making airplanes — per man, per machine, per unit of floor space.

These savings in manufacturing costs have been passed along to the Government, and hence to you, as taxpayer and bond buyer.

About Boeing Employees

Credit for the steady production increase on Flying Fortresses belongs to the unslacking pace maintained by Boeing employees, to their increasing experience on the job, to the constant effort of plant supervision, to new specialized tools (of which Boeing has developed more than a quarter-million), and to over-all organization and simplification of the manufacturing job.

In March, 1942, about 2.6% of the factory employees were women; by December 31 this had increased to 42%, and it is now approximately 45%.

Boeing's Seattle plant was selected in 1942 as the first aircraft manufacturer to be honored with the joint Army-Navy "E" for excellence of production.

The Wichita Division was likewise honored by an award of the Army-Navy Production "E." This division recently delivered its 7000th Primary Trainer.

Both plants have since received the six-months star for continued excellence of production.

The great production records at both plants are further evidence of the manner in which Boeing employees and management are endeavoring to fulfil their pledge to contribute their utmost to the war, both in the quality of their products and in the quantity of their production.

Engineering for Victory

The Boeing engineering staff consists of hundreds of men, with experience in more than twenty-five distinct engineering fields; it is considered one of the largest as well as ablest engineering groups ever assembled.

During the year, it continued development work on the combat-proved Flying Fortress, making it an even more effective weapon against our country's enemies.

New experimental designs were also completed and test-flown.

Boeing sent field engineers to every combat area where Flying Fortresses are in service . . . expert "trouble shooters" whose technical experience is proving of great value to the Army Air Forces.

One of the most modern and complete wind tunnels and aerodynamic research laboratories in the world is now being completed by Boeing. It incorporates many notable advances, which will contribute further toward Boeing's engineering for victory.

Political Maneuver

John L. Lewis lives by the doctrine, "Rule or ruin." He manifested this when he led the secession movement of six unions from the A. F. of L. in 1935 and established the C. I. O. in bitter rivalry. He made it still plainer when he withdrew his United Mine Workers Union from the C. I. O. a year ago after his political leadership of organized labor had been repudiated at the polls. The plainest illustration of all is to be found in his outright defiance of the Federal Government in the present coal crisis. He cannot control the War Labor Board; therefore he seeks to destroy it.

The A. F. of L. might usefully scan this record before it accepts Lewis' application for reinstatement and takes him back into the fold. Its size would be increased and its bargaining position strengthened, of course, by the return of the large and powerful U. M. W. U. But it would have to let John Lewis be top dog or else count on having him gnaw away at the props of the organization. Lewis can give orders; he has never shown a willingness to take them.

There is more than union politics involved in this latest Lewis move. He has a feud, to be sure, with Philip Murray and the other labor leaders who succeeded him in control of the C. I. O. But he has a deeper and more bitter feud with Franklin Roosevelt. He tried in 1940 to take the leadership of labor away from the President. He is still trying and will try again in 1944. Indeed, this appears to have been the basic motive behind his behavior in the coal dispute. It is also the motive behind his bid for reaffiliation with the A. F. of L. That he has also, in his time, fought the federation leaders is no stumbling block to one who lives by expediency. Alliances are fashioned, not out of mutual sympathies, but out of common enmities.

John Lewis is a shrewd political manipulator with a flair for the dramatic. It is barely possible, though scarcely probable, that he can deliver the labor vote to the Republican Party next fall. If he does so, his price will be high—a higher price than any political party entrusted with the responsibility of government can afford to pay. The Democrats have found that out. The Republicans might be wise to lock the stable door before the Trojan horse can get inside.

Constitutional Issue

Before passing the Kerr Committee amendment barring salary payments to three Federal employes, the House devoted the better part of two days to debate upon it. The outstanding contribution to this debate, in our judgment, was made by Congressman Hobbs of Alabama. Avoiding any reference to personalities, he set forth simply, starkly and compellingly the constitutional issues which are at stake. The amendment, declared Judge Hobbs, "not only violates the constitutional mandate against bills of attainder but it also violates the doctrine—implicit throughout the Constitution—of separation of powers, and the explicit creation of a government composed of three separate but coordinate branches—legislative, executive, and judicial." These are precisely the considerations which impelled this newspaper to protest against the Kerr proposal.

It is not easy to understand how members of the House, if they listened to Judge Hobbs, could override his clear, incisive reasoning. Yet few seemed swayed by him. The amendment was passed by a vote of 318 to 62. Curiously enough, most of the Kerr Committee members took pains to express their distaste for the investigation in which they had engaged. Representative Powers, for example, referred to it as "one of the most unpleasant and distasteful tasks I have ever undertaken." And many of the Congressmen who spoke in support of the amendment seemed principally intent upon indicating their friendship for and loyalty to Congressman Kerr and his fellow committeemen. The good intentions of the Kerr Committee were scarcely the main issue. But this is not the only situation in which the House has shown that camaraderie among colleagues transcends real questions of principle.

When the Senate takes up the Kerr proposal, it need not be motivated by these personal loyalties. This is perhaps one of the real virtues of a bicameral legislature. The amenities, as far as Congressman Kerr is concerned, have now been observed. The Senators are free to consider the amenities as they affect the three Federal employes in question and as they affect the far more important issue of constitutional government. If the Senate wishes to judge this case on its merits, it can do no better than to study the arguments and the legal citations advanced by Judge Hobbs.

Tax Fallacies

By playing upon the theme of tax "cancellation" in his letter to Senator George and Representative Doughton the President made it appear that "thousands of persons" in the upper-income groups would be unjustly enriched by the pay-as-you-go measure passed by the Senate. Anyone who accepts his premises must agree with his conclusions. But the premises happen to be fallacious. Nobody's tax liabilities would be canceled or remitted under the modified Ruml plan approved by the Senate. The temporary basis for assessing the amount to be paid would simply be shifted from the preceding year to the current year. Moreover, to avoid giving any individual a windfall because of that shift the Senate bill provided that taxes in the present year should be paid on either 1942 or 1943 income—whichever was higher. A special windfall tax was also imposed with a view to preventing abatement of taxes on war profits.

The limited gains that would result from the change to a current basis would be deferred until the taxpayer died or until his income began to shrink. For the duration of the war, however, taxpayers in the upper brackets would continue to pay high wartime taxes. It is a mystery how the President arrived at the conclusion that the Senate bill would result in "a transfer of a substantial part of the cost of the war from the upper income to the middle and lower income groups." It is no less puzzling to be told that "the burden from which our most fortunate taxpayers have been relieved" would later have to be shouldered by men on the battle fronts and by others. The only conclusion possible is that in matters of finance the President either is out of his depth or is the victim of his prejudices.

The President himself concedes that the upper-income groups might pay just as many dollars into the Treasury in 1943 under the pay-as-you-go program as under the present plan. As a matter of fact, since the national income is a good deal higher this year than last, the shift to a current basis of payment would undoubtedly enrich the Treasury. It would bring in larger returns from taxpayers in all brackets. To be sure, if the national income declines when the war is over, most individuals will begin to pay taxes immediately on the basis of current incomes that may be smaller than those of the year 1942. But that is a problem about which we can worry when we come to it. Taxes vary from year to year, not only with reference to changes in income but in accordance with changes in rates imposed under the law. One of the major advantages of a pay-as-you-go system is that we can more readily adjust tax schedules to the needs of the moment when assessments are based on current income.

We can get on a current basis if we choose without having to load mythical burdens on future generations and without imposing extra taxes now on the pretense that they represent a partial offset to cancellation of last year's tax liability. Unfortunately the President does not choose to accept a simple solution of a controversy that has delayed for months the passage of necessary tax legislation. He has, however, indicated a willingness to accept some sort of compromise plan. The Robertson-Forand bill, passed by the House, is the best alternative to the rejected Senate bill. It would put the great majority of taxpayers on a current basis, while leaving payments under all but the normal and first surtax bracket applicable to incomes of the preceding year. Although the proposed discrimination against those in the upper brackets is illogical, it does not entail any payment of extra taxes by these groups. In addition, the House bill would disarm those critics who make political capital out of the Ruml plan by maintaining that it is a rich man's plot to get tax rebates.

Common to both House and Senate bills is a provision for imposition of a 20 per cent withholding levy on wages and salaries. About that, at least, the House and Senate should be able to agree. Rather than dish the chance for getting some kind of collection-at-source method in operation before July 1, the conferees might find it advisable to cast aside all the controversial provisions relating to change of the yearly tax basis and ask for approval of a simple withholding tax.

In Lieu Of OPA

Following hard upon the discovery by a Post reporter of a potato cache in a local liquor store comes word from New York of a "black" potato hunt led by Mayor LaGuardia himself. It ended in a barber shop where thousands of pounds of potatoes of suspicious origin were stored in defiance of municipal building laws. These amateur forays serve a very useful purpose in advertising the existence of bootleg activities that even the novice can track down with comparative ease. Indeed, the openness with which violations of OPA regulations are perpetrated testifies to the hopeless inadequacy of the OPA's enforcement organization. If OPA would transfer to this job some of the men who are now preoccupied with making industry over, there would be better results.

We have stated repeatedly that consumer cooperation is essential to effective enforcement of price and rationing regulations. But that does not imply that consumers should be called upon to locate the source of food supplies intended for the black markets. That task has been assigned to the OPA, and it has fallen down badly on the job. Weak enforcement is, however, only part of the explanation for the disorders that cause black markets in basic commodities to flourish. From every quarter come complaints that legitimate wholesalers and retailers who try to obey the rules are being "squeezed," harried and, in many cases, driven out of business by a maze of rules and regulations that cut the volume of their business and increase their unit business costs, while setting rigid limits on their selling prices. The price-control system, as well as the OPA itself, is badly in need of a complete overhauling if the country is to be spared a complete collapse of an already seriously shaky price-control structure. So far we have had a lot of fair promises of reform and a minimum of accomplishment.

Yes—But

Nothing more gratuitous could be imagined than the amendment to the reciprocal trade agreements law which was voted on Wednesday by the Senate Finance Committee. By the margin of one vote the committee approved a proviso that any agreement could be terminated by joint resolution six months after the end of hostilities. The fact is, of course, that Congress could at any time pass such a resolution. It has the power already without tying a reminder of that power to this particular law. All the amendment would do, therefore, is increase the uncertainty in the world as to the part that America will play after the war. Indeed, out of the uncertainty would grow an active suspicion. For, if the amendment would add nothing to the existing powers of Congress, the world will ask what is the intention back of it. Surely the amendment, if it passed, would demonstrate that the heart of Congress was not in the trade agreement policy. If a landlord, holding a year's agreement with a tenant subject to 90 days' notice on either side, were to remind his tenant of that fact after a month of tenancy, what would the tenant do? Surely he would try to disengage himself from such an unreliable landlord at the first opportunity. Is this the way we want to maintain our international relations after the war? Congress knows full well that every agreement contains escape clauses allowing for denunciation with a view to safeguarding this country against a change of circumstances.

Normalcy

There is almost unanimous testimony by those who were present Wednesday in the chamber of the House of Representatives that the demonstration of welcome given to the Duke and Duchess of Windsor exceeded both on spontaneity and in cubic volume of sound the reception given to Mr. Churchill himself. That was all the more remarkable because the duke and duchess were seated rather inconspicuously in the gallery as mere spectators, whereas Mr. Churchill was the focus of the whole business.

The question before us now is whether this extraordinary enthusiasm over a former king and his consort by the legislators of a great democratic republic has any special significance, and if so, what. Perhaps it was a mere matter of reflexes conditioned by publicity, because, inch for inch, the Windsors in the past half-dozen years have probably had a good deal more attention in print than Mr. Churchill for all his assured historical stature, and have probably had their pictures in the papers and newsreels twice as often. Or it may have been patriotic enthusiasm for another American girl who had made good, had actually made a fairy tale come true. Or it may have been the proverbial fascination that royalty holds for all of us who have been reared in the republican tradition. Or it may have been a reaffirmation of our devotion in a time of violence and harsh realism to the romantic principle.

But for ourselves we think it was mainly nostalgic. After all, as public figures, the Windsors belonged to a universe in which most of us felt quite at home and where everything operated according to very simple rules which the dullest of us could appreciate, the good old world of the Sunday supplements. A universe governed by grand strategy, military logistics, geopolitics and so on may be all very well for these brainy fellows like Mr. Churchill, Senator Chandler and Professor Haushofer, but it leaves the rest of us rather bewildered and frightened. We should say that what this sick old world needs, even more than a 5-cent cigar, is another good love story of high life, with another happy ending.

SUNRISE GUARD: FORT HARRISON

Dawn is rose-barred over the barracks roofs,
Rose-petal color, misty and cool to the finger-tips;
And I march on guard in my sleep,
Sore-footed, a chill wind knifing my knees,
Soldiering it automatically, snarling for the Relief:

Yet throw them all on the scale: ice in the wind,
Blisters, no sleep, and a harder road ahead:
Death over ocean-ways: they are small in price
To pay for a rose-barred sunrise, a rose on the finger-tips.

Two-Front War

By Mark Sullivan

Mr. Churchill

THE QUESTION—had we not better, at this time, throw most of our strength against Japan—continues to trouble those whom it troubled before Prime Minister Churchill addressed Congress.

Mr. Churchill discussed the question as candidly as was possible in a public address. And in the private discussions that go on, the reasons for policy—as between continuing to press Germany and turning to press Japan—are completely understood. Yet some who know those reasons continue to think that, while holding Germany in a ring, we should, at this time, make our major drive again Japan. This is not lay opinion merely. It is not merely the kind of opinion expressed in the demand by Senator Chandler of Kentucky. It is shared by some who are professionally familiar with the military and other fundamental factors involved. In the end, of course, the question must be decided by the preponderance of such professional and informed opinion.

Mr. Churchill said the chief difficulty, in solving this and all the questions of where to attack and when is "logistics." That is a military term meaning, mainly, distance. This we must look in the face; and we must accept some other inexorable facts.

The first is, we are fighting a war on two fronts. That is an extreme disadvantage. It is ABC of military science that no nation should fight on two fronts if it can possibly avoid such a course. That Hitler voluntarily broke this rule, when he attacked Russia, is the chief cause of his present decline, probably will be the chief cause of his defeat. In our case, that we are fighting on two fronts is not a mistake on our part. It was forced upon us. From the time Germany and Japan lined up against us, their basic purpose was to compel us to fight on two fronts.

NOT MERELY are we fighting on two fronts. We are doing it under circumstances which compel us to admit a somber superlative. We fight this war under the most disadvantageous two-front conditions that ever beset any nation at war. Chief and worst of these disadvantages is distance. Our two fronts are as far from our home base as it is possible for them to be and remain on the surface of the earth. Of Hitler's two fronts, the Russian one is only a few hundred miles from his home base, the western one less. But of our two fronts, the Pacific one is some 6 to 10 thousand miles away, the European one some three thousand. Also, Hitler can reach both his fronts by land, while in our case we must cross two oceans.

The advantage given Hitler, the disadvantage put upon us, by distance, if expressed in terms of manpower, is probably equal to an immense army of itself—an invisible army led by an invisible general with an ancient Greek name, Logistics. Express it in terms of an indispensable supply—gas and oil. The amount we must consume in the mere business of reaching our enemy, is probably greater than the amount we consume in fighting him after we reach him. And in this war, gas and oil are vital. Gas and oil, especially gas for a minimum force in the air, may turn out to be the factor that decides the war.

Here we come to a disadvantage which we must blame on ourselves. When war approached, we supposed we could get our gas for the Pacific part of it from the nearby East Indies oil fields. We did not anticipate what Japan would do at Pearl Harbor; or that, because of Pearl Harbor, Japan would take the East Indies. As things are we must transport gas several thousand miles from the American continent to the South Pacific—an addition to the fundamental handicap of logistics.

APPLY THE whole factor of logistics to the proposal that we shift the emphasis of our attack from Germany to Japan. For Hitler, a shift of fronts is comparatively simple. He can shuttle his air force back and forth in a matter of hours, his armies in a matter of days. Hitler can shift his concentration of strength from one front to the other, as strategy calls for it, with comparative ease. But we, having for 17 patient months built up our strategy and disposed our strength on the assumption that we are to beat Hitler first—we are now asked to rearrange our strategy and redispose our force to beat Japan first.

For simplicity's sake, the situation is here expressed with the utmost simplicity. The whole picture is in fact, as Mr. Churchill put it with characteristic British understatement, "much more complicated."

It is true that, in military science, it is almost as serious to shift attack from one front to another, as to be caught in the necessity of fighting on two fronts at all. Yet in the present case, at the present stage of the war, it would be feasible to hold Germany in the ring in which she now is, and focus our fighting against Japan. But the conditions which make the present situation, as Mr. Churchill says, a complicated one, can only be known to Mr. Churchill, President Roosevelt and their respective high commands.

Softening-Up Europe

By Paul Schubert

Three-Way Bombardment

EVER SINCE Tunisia fell to our arms, Italy has been under intensified aerial bombardment. It was anticipated that this would be the first visible reward of the North African victory. Together with the reopening of the Sicilian Narrows to our shipping, it is a great step forward toward the larger goal, total defeat of the Axis.

Two other developments of the aerial warfare are somewhat less expected, at least in the public mind.

First is the stepped-up use of American heavy bombers for long-range daylight bombing of objectives in Germany. Emden was attacked recently by the largest force of our heavy bombers ever sent over Germany. Kiel had been attacked not long before. Results of these raids are excellent. This is the opposite of what was forecast by those who maintained that the daylight bombing attack was a failure and that we should have to shift to night bombing if we were ever to use our air power at full effectiveness in the European theater.

The other new development is the rising strength of Russian air power and the aggressiveness with which it is being used on the war's East Front. We assume that to a certain extent this represents the flow of lend-lease weapons to Russia, but we realize that all the aircraft in the world mean nothing without a highly developed operational factor. Russian air power may become a decisive asset to the United Nations before the war is over, especially as it extends its range for the bombing of key transport and base points behind the Axis East Front. We must remember, too, the value of Russian air potential in the war against Axis-partner Japan.

IN THE European theater, the growth of United Nations air power is reflected by the three-way bombardment of Axis targets.

Symbolically, one might say that on the day when aircraft from the British Isles, from Russia and from Africa met in a bombing mission over Berlin the war would be over . . .

That is symbolism, however; not reality.

That thinking takes us back to the early days of the war, when aerial bombardment was a new weapon and its enthusiasts were still dreaming of super-colossal one-shot blows that would end the war in victory overnight.

The reasoning behind this enthusiasm was not so much statistical as emotional. There is nothing new, statistically, about the destructive effect of aerial bombardment. The destructive part of it is not the work of the aircraft, but of explosive. Aircraft are merely the medium by which the explosive is moved from the attack-base to the target. While this medium was novel, it had the same fascination for its proponents as the gun must have had when it arrived, smoking and thundering, to replace the catapult, ballista and crossbow several hundred years ago. Surely, men must have thought, the gun will be irresistible—if it doesn't win by smashing, it will win by terrifying.

There is still a tendency to expect too much for the terror effect of aerial bombardment.

The men who are designing our aerial strategy are not, however, basing the pattern of their attack on terror. Air-bombing is expensive and takes much time. If bombs are used ineffectually they might as well be dumped in the ocean—or, better yet, never dumped at all.

WHEN USED effectually they work wonders. The way to use them effectually, we have discovered, is to treat aerial warfare as a coordinate part of a big scheme of total attack. This coordination was brilliantly demonstrated during the North African campaign just finished. It is safe to say that we could not have won that campaign without air power—and equally safe to say that air power alone could not have won the campaign for us.

As to how we used air power in North Africa (apart from its use in actual combat over the fighting fronts, which was almost a secondary use, since there weren't many days of frontal combat during the six-month campaign), just realize how systematically, week after week, we struck at the enemy's line of communications and supply—harbors, airdromes, dumps, on both sides of the Mediterranean . . . realize that at the end the enemy collapsed, not because of manpower shortage, but because supply-strangulation knocked the props out of his combat ability. His morale cracked, not from terror, but from a sense of futility. Air power played a large part in achieving this result—but not with one-shot super-tactics.

For weeks our air power has been softening up Europe with dozens of well-aimed blows. Now the attack is going on from three directions. Time will show us the results.

Letters To The Editor

Budget Committee

Recently the people of Washington have been reading quite a bit in the newspapers about the unfortunate predicament in which one of our charitable organizations finds itself.

To profit by another's ills is ordinarily not a very sporting proposition but in a comment on an existing situation will help produce a better understanding on the part of the public of some of its community activities perhaps such a comment is justifiable.

It is sincerely to be hoped that when all the facts in this particular case are known the charges will not prove to be as severe as alleged but any one reading the indictment who has been actively connected with Washington's Community Chest will immediately say to himself, "That couldn't happen in a chest agency because of our budget committee."

Ever since the inception of the Chest in Washington, the writer has been among those who contended that, from the public's point of view, the chest's most valuable asset was not in the low cost of solicitation or in the elimination of many separate campaigns but in its budget committee. Perhaps a brief review of how this committee operates would be interesting.

In the first place, it consists of a number of representative citizens who themselves are regular contributors, who have no axes to grind other than to know how their money is being used and who spend many days and hours, purely on a voluntary basis, analyzing the proposed budget of each constituent agency. Before those budgets are approved and made a part of the total fund to be solicited, executive officers and members of the separate organizations are often called before the committee to substantiate particular items.

Anyone who has ever appeared before the committee, as has happened to the writer on a number of occasions, can testify to the meticulousness with which every item is scrutinized. Furthermore, the agencies must submit monthly detailed reports on their expenditures and these must conform strictly to the approved budget, otherwise they cannot receive reimbursement from the chest's funds.

It seems, therefore, that any institution eligible to membership in the Chest and which really wants to serve the whole community in the best possible manner should have no objection to becoming a member of an organization that seeks so sincerely to protect both the institution and the public even though, because of its own private sources of income, it may not actually need the Chest's help in securing funds.

Furthermore, it is the writer's sincere hope that when the Community War Fund, which includes the Community Chest, enters its next campaign it will have the fullest support of those responsible citizens who want to be assured that there are no unnecessary items in the budgets of the participating organizations, that these budgets represent minimum requirements only and that when the funds are once in hand they are expended only in strict conformance with those predetermined budgets.

Drafting Fathers

There has been much discussion of the rising rate of juvenile delinquency due to employment of mothers which results in children being left unsupervised or in the care of the usual poorly equipped and poorly staffed day nursery. At a conference called by the Children's Bureau Mrs. Roosevelt is quoted as saying, ". . . the loss of child supervision because fathers and mothers are preoccupied with war jobs are the chief reasons for the wartime rise in child delinquency."

If fathers are drafted, juvenile delinquency will rise at phenomenal rates because it will force mothers to go to work to support their children.

There has been a great deal of talk about setting up really good nursery schools, but very little has actually been done about it. Talk won't provide care for children when their fathers are drafted and their mothers must get jobs. Nothing much has been done about after-school supervision for older children either.

Slack D. C. Officials

Representative Randolph of West Virginia, in the columns of your paper, charged "indifference" by Government authorities toward civilian employes' health. And he was impressed with the failure of local authorities to deal with the social disease problem.

I have been in many cities, but never have seen such callous indifference as is displayed here on many things. Slovenly streets and sidewalks; traffic congestion; traffic signals set for 40 to 45 second intervals, which is ridiculous; civic organizations chewing the fat and letting it go at that.

The Once Over

Elmer Rebels at Radio Jingles

"Try to get a loaf of bread of the antijingle kind," ordered Elmer Twitchell, as Mrs. Twitchell was about to leave for the store.

"What do you mean?" asked the wife.

"Anything, so long as no juvenile jingle stuff has been used to help put it over on the air," explained Elmer. "And are you getting some beer for me?"

"A half dozen bottles," said Mrs. Twitchell. "What brand?"

"Just be sure it's never been tied up with any kindergarten lyric, that's all," snapped Elmer.

* * * *

"What's wrong?" asked the wife.

"I'm in revolt," explained Elmer.

"Against what?"

"Against this gooney, goofy epidemic of nitwit jingles sweeping the country in connection with all products advertised on the radio," said Elmer. "I've stood it as long as possible. All I want to know about a product to make me buy something else is that it is linked up with Mother Goose and one-fingered piano players."

"Those jingles are a little trying," admitted the wife.

"What has come over the radio advertising agencies?" demanded Mr. Twitchell. "They must have decided that nothing can be sold to the people of America unless it is associated with particularly inane jingles. Cigarettes, gum, tooth paste, dog food, hair tonics, insect powders, floor varnish, cement urns, soups, underwear . . . anything at all! They tie 'em up with Little Bo Peep, Three Blind Mice, Rock-a-Bye Baby or something similar set to music for particularly unnerving voices."

"That's a rather catchy one on 'Pattycake, Pattycake, Baker's Man' that they're using to boost that new roof-tar," said Mrs. Twitchell.

"And maybe you like that nursery rhyme they have set to music in that septic tank sales drive by radio," sneered Elmer. "Bah! I quit when the makers of an arch supporter had a quartet sing 'London Bridge Is Falling Down' as a sales argument."

* * * *

Mr. Twitchell was especially exasperated.

"Have most of our advertising agencies been taken over by the Kiddies Clubs?" he demanded. "Why the devil doesn't somebody try to interest the customer in some product without any jingle whatever? I ain't heard a program in weeks that wasn't begun or interrupted by this stuff. Do you wanna know how the maker of any product in this country could capture the buying public in one week?"

"How?" asked Mrs. Twitchell.

"By announcing at the start of the program 'Ladies and gentlemen, the maker of this product is an adult. He thinks there are intelligent customers in the U. S. A. He hates jingles and has just shot an advertising agent for suggesting the use of one in radio sales promotion.' The response would be sensational."

"I guess you're right," said Mrs. Twitchell.

All Talk and Persiflage finished first and second at Belmont last week. There's two that are hard to separate, as the charts might say.

Ceilings are announced on soaps. Our great fear is that we have to take a bath in a black market.

Clothes rationing is now possible, Washington admits. We can't wait for Mayor LaGuardia to order a clothesless Tuesday in New York.

Jay Russell says the ration crisis will not be really serious until you can't find food for thought.

And it is Mr. Russell who reports that Private Purkey has had so much k. p. duty that he is now seeing "pots before his eyes."

Book Drive

Those of us who have given generously feel badly to think the drive has not succeeded. We gave over 100 books in one field or another. One reason I think is that most book lovers cannot endure to see people "bang and shut" books any old way into large boxes. While we tied ours up, it might be a good example for those collecting the books, like Woodward & Lothrop, to show the respect that any good book deserves by having the shelf where a book might be neatly placed, not put into a large box with other books any old way. I know we did not wish to put our books there. Some one gave us all of their library to dispose of and we have not yet finished because we could not see books treated in this way.

Your editorial in this morning's paper, "Worth A Celebration," completely ignores the psychology of the great mass of citizens, and no doubt also of the chiefs of the armed forces. True, the African victory under ordinary conditions of wartime, would have been well worth a celebration, but the public realizes that it would be rather ridiculous to celebrate the achievements of our Army and Navy, while they are under immediate threat of complete nullification, or worse, by the leadership of the United Mine Workers.

Global Strategy

By Ernest Lindley

Mr. Churchill On The Pacific

LINDLEY

IN THE months immediately following Pearl Harbor, President Roosevelt's great political problem was to overcome and redirect a fierce popular desire to fight Japan first, if not exclusively. This was a considerable task, from which a weaker man would have shrunk.

The reasons for deploying important American forces against Germany and, indeed, for giving the defeat of Germany priority over the defeat of Japan, were compelling. Russia and Britain together did not appear to be strong enough to hold Germany, much less defeat it. The defeat of Russia, or its reduction to military impotence, would have doomed the American-British combination to a very long war. The Germans would then have been able to turn their principal attention to Great Britain either immediately, or after a diversion in South America. Either way, we would have been hard pressed to preserve the Atlantic barrier against the Nazis.

The best, if not the only, hope of disposing of the danger on our Atlantic side within a few years lay in keeping the Russians fighting. Until Germany was beaten we were doomed to fight in Japan with very little help. Once Germany is beaten we can count on very important help from Britain, and there may be a chance of getting some from Russia. If we had concentrated our own strength on Japan first, it would have not been enough to bring an early victory but Russia might have lost the Caucasus and the British, Egypt. Such disasters—and even worse ones might have ensued—would have far more than offset any progress which the United States could have made against Japan in 1942 by concentrating its strength on that task.

THE STRENGTH of the argument for defeating the Nazis first, while fighting an essentially defensive war in the Pacific, gradually won consent and support for the decision made by the President and Mr. Churchill. But the emotions of a great many citizens have continued to run in the opposite direction. The American naval and military leaders in the Pacific have kept a drumfire of pleas and requests for more weapons and more men. And while some of them probably sincerely concur in the major strategic decision, and are only asking for the small secretion of strength necessary to worry the Japs and wear them down by limited offensive actions, others probably are privately opposed to the Churchill-Roosevelt strategy. The Navy has long been so Pacific-minded that many of its officers are notably lacking in comprehension of global strategy. The Chinese and their sympathizers, and the Australians, have, of course, contributed to the agitation, as have General MacArthur's headquarters in the Southwest Pacific.

But the demand to give greater attention to Japan has, of course, been incited and exploited by politicians—especially by the isolationists who opposed the Roosevelt policy before Pearl Harbor.

The events of the last nine months, beginning with the landing on Guadalcanal, have shown that the strategy prescribed for the Pacific was not a purely passive defense. It will be relatively less passive this year than it was last.

When the "localitis" among Army and Navy commanders in the Pacific has been cut away—together with the less worthy clamor from politicians who are still isolationists or who are merely looking for an easy way to attract votes—the plausible argument for postponing further major offensives against the Nazis while Japan is dealt with runs like this: The Germans are now contained in Europe and their strength is being drained steadily by aerial bombardment. The Japs, on the other hand, are getting stronger and will continue to get stronger as long as they are permitted to develop the resources now under their control. Therefore, we can afford to let attrition work against the Nazis for a year or so, while we either crush the Japs or, at least, reconquer the positions from which, by naval or air attacks, we can make sure that they also decline steadily in strength.

THE ANSWER to this argument was set forth in Mr. Churchill's speech before Congress. The Germans are not yet surely contained. The American-British high command believes that the German army is about to launch another offensive against Russia: in Mr. Churchill's words, "There is little doubt that Hitler is reserving his supreme gambler's throw for a third attempt to break the heart and spirit and destroy the armed forces of the mighty nation which he has already twice assaulted in vain."

The Russians at the present time are holding at least 190 divisions, plus 28 satellite divisions—as against the equivalent of about 15 divisions which the Germans and Italians lost in Tunisia.

American-British strategy must therefore still pivot on Russia. Everything "sensible and practicable" that is within the power of the American-British combination must be done to take more of the weight of the German army off Russia during 1943. For the defeat or crippling of Russia would postpone, perhaps by several years, the day of victory over Germany. Or, to consider a more optimistic possibility, if as the result of another failure in Russia and of the pounding of the British and American bombers, German morale shows signs of cracking, it will be highly important to have the forces deployed and ready for final and overwhelming assaults.

This does not mean that the Pacific will be neglected. Mr. Churchill agrees that the most rapid progress possible, with due regard for global strategy, must be made toward carrying the war to Japan, at least by air.

Britain May Suppress Anti-Soviet Polish Press

London, May 20 (AP).—Brendan Bracken, minister of information, told the House of Commons today that certain foreign language newspapers in Britain might be suppressed as a result of their comments on the Russian-Polish diplomatic break.

He apparently referred to Polish journals which have made attacks on Russia and whose suppression has been frequently proposed in Parliament.

Gallup Poll

By George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., May 20—While workers in war plants throughout the country think the management of their factories is on the whole satisfactory, nevertheless many are convinced that much inefficiency exists on the part of management and this inefficiency is holding back production.

More than half of the war workers interviewed by the Institute in five of the principal war production areas think management is making mistakes either in handling production or in handling men. If these mistakes were rectified, the war factories would, in the opinion of the workers, be able to produce an average of 20 per cent more than they are now producing.

Poor Planning Cited

The survey was undertaken as a sidelight on the problem of manpower. As more and more men are drafted into the armed forces, industry will either have to rely on hiring new labor from a dwindling supply, or on getting more production per man out of the present labor force.

To sound the ideas of the war workers themselves on the question of plant efficiency, interviewers talked to such workers in New England, the Philadelphia-Baltimore area, the Buffalo-Cleveland area, the Detroit area, and in California. They were asked:

"What do you think is the greatest mistake that your company makes?"

The results follow:

1. Poor planning in production, lack of coordination between departments, failure to supply materials on time 13%
2. Poor employer-employe relations, no interest taken in employes or their problems, failure to profit by suggestions and ideas of the workers 8%
3. Unfair wages, lack of proper pay-scale for different types of work, lack of incentive payments for better work 6%
4. Wrong types hired for certain jobs, workers not properly trained, jobs not suitable to abilities of workers 6%
5. Bosses too lenient, too much loafing permitted, too many workers sitting around doing nothing .. 5%
6. Lack of competent supervisors, men in key jobs who don't know their business 4%
7. No modern equipment, slow in improving methods or standardizing products 3%

Miscellaneous 9%

No important mistakes made 46%

It is interesting to note that complaints about wages do not seem to rank as important in the minds of workers as do planning and coordination, and worker-management relations.

When workers were asked how much more the company could produce if the conditions complain of were corrected, as many as 27 per cent said production could be increased by one-third to one-half or more. The average estimate, however, was one-fifth.

Would Stop Loafing.

While the amount of loafing is not singled out as a major drawback to production, nevertheless the survey found that many workers see evidence of loafing in their plants, and are in favor of drastic measures to stop it.

Price Control: A Communication

The Office of Price Administration has in the past enjoyed favorable support from your paper on most of its policies and operations. Your recent editorials, including the one in this morning's edition dealing with the rayon hosiery regulation, Maximum Price Regulation No. 339, seem to me to involve some confusion on the part of your editorial writer as to the purpose of including standards in OPA regulations and, as a consequence, the editorial itself tends to misrepresent the true situation with regard to Maximum Price Regulation No. 339.

If you will permit me, I would like to make clear the relation of the incorporation of standards in price regulations to the basic responsibilities of this office. I would like to do this because if in any way the Office of Price Administration is not living up to the responsibilities and obligations which Congress and the President have placed upon it, I want to be the first to know in what respects we are failing.

As you know, the OPA progressed from selective price control to over-all price control when it issued the General Maximum Price Regulation last spring. Price control experience here and abroad does not justify the assumption that the total effort can be spent on some so-called "basic" prices, leaving others completely unchecked. All prices are interrelated and while the prices of some luxury items are, in themselves, of minor importance to over-all price control, it is not, as a practical matter, possible to ignore them.

It is, of course, possible to say that women's hosiery is not a commodity of major importance in the cost of living. Nevertheless, it does represent a dollar volume running well into over 300 million dollars. The effect of an increase in consumer prices which contribute to the cost of living is to bring, by just that much, increased pressure for higher wages and salaries. We must not lose sight of the fact that increases at one point almost inevitably produce pressure for increases at others points. The Office of Price Administration has therefore accepted the responsibility of undertaking to restrain price increases across the whole field in so far as it is administratively feasible. Naturally we shall continue to pursue the policy of first establishing controls over the most important prices.

Even though the relation between standards and prices seems too obvious to require extensive discussion, it is plain that many misconceptions arise on the subject. It is a simple and indisputable fact that quality deterioration is inflationary. Progressive dollar price inflation means that each dollar buys progressively less and less. Progressive quality deterioration means exactly the same thing—that each dollar buys less and less. Obviously a Federal agency charged by Congress with the duty of preventing inflation cannot confine its attention to the nominal dollar price and ignore the relation between that dollar price and what the dollar actually buys.

The control of standards is not limited to one method. Whenever this problem arises in the course of developing a price regulation, the various methods available are carefully considered before any action is taken. In some cases, as in hosiery, the most suitable method for relating price to the real value of the commodity is the development of a precise statement of specifications clearly defining the article in relation to the price to be charged.

Why there should be opposition to clearly stating standards as a guide to both the industry and consumer is difficult to understand. There is no consumer who is not interested in knowing the quality of the commodity which he purchases. Surely industry does not want to keep the consumer in the dark on this matter in order to sell him something of less value than he thinks he is getting. It is hardly conceivable that, at a time when the public is being asked to sacrifice its sons abroad and much of its normal way of life at home, industry would want to evade quality standards which enable the public to make more economical use of its funds and the industry to make more economical use of materials, manpower, and other productive facilities.

The provision of standards for any industry with as complex a variety of products as that of the hosiery industry is an extremely difficult task. Of this problem the statement of considerations on this regulation, as filed with the Federal Register for public inspection, says: "Technical experts of the industry, the labor unions, the War Production Board and the Office of Price Administration, undertook to cooperate in specifying minimum standards for Grade 'A' hosiery, and lent their unremitting efforts to its accomplishment. The task was not easy and it has not been completed. The complications resulting from the diversity of productive facilities, shortages of rayon yarns, the uncertainty of procuring reinforcement yarns, and the chaotic historical background made a final solution for these problems difficult. What has been accomplished is presented herewith more as a blueprint pattern than as a finished structure."

From the above discussion it should be clear, I think, that the Office of Price Administration is driving toward the accomplishment of its major responsibility: that of stabilizing prices, and that the effective stabilization of prices requires the control of all prices of any significant influence. It should be equally clear, I believe, that the stabilization of nominal dollar prices without accompanying stabilization of quality—what the nominal dollar buys—would be a futile gesture.

May I further point out to you that while the Office of Price Administration has not been given a directive to simplify products or industries, or directly to modify industrial and trade practices, it does not in any sense lack the authority to establish requirements of form and quality which are essential to effective stabilization of prices. The Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 specifically says: "Whenever in the judgment of the administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to execute the purposes of this act, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit speculative or manipulative practices (including practices relating to change in form or quality) or hoarding, in connection with any commodity . . . which in his judgment are equivalent to or are likely to result in price . . . increases . . . inconsistent with the purposes of this act."

It is not the intention of the Office of Price Administration to undertake to make over American industry under cover of securing price control. But it is just as firmly our intention to employ commodity specifications and quality standards when these steps are essential to the control of the prices concerned.

I trust that this statement will serve to make clear the policy and practice of this office with respect to the use of standard provisions as an essential phase of price stabilization.

Respectfully yours,
PRENTISS M. BROWN
Administrator, Office of Price Administration.

ON THESE 5 DAYS

There may be STANDING ROOM ONLY

In peacetime, a Memorial Day falling on Monday and giving an extra long weekend, would be a signal to plan a trip.

But this is a year of war, and with troops moving, holiday or no holiday, and large numbers of Service men going home on short leave—there will not be sufficient berths and seats left to accommodate all civilians who wish to go places over the Memorial Day weekend.

Therefore, should you plan to travel on the five days indicated above, the only space available for you may be standing room.

We are sincerely sorry about it, and will do our best to take care of you if you must travel, but the needs of the fighting forces and essential travel in connection with the war effort must come first.

Provided your trip is necessary, and you cannot get away before or after the days shown, try to take a train leaving early in the day.

So there may be more room for everyone, PLEASE TRAVEL LIGHT—take only one bag aboard.

We're Not Fire Buffs, But: Of course, most everybody runs to a fire in a small town and thinks nothing about it. When towns become cities they call grown-up fire enthusiasts "buffs". We're grown-up, but when we run to fires it is for a different reason, not enthusiasm. Fires can tie us up pretty badly if they occur on streets over which our Cars are operated, because of lines of hose over the tracks. In cities where the overhead trolley is used, fires are not so much of a problem. They just put down simple gadgets that permit the cars to operate over the hose. We can't do that. Our underground "plows" that pick up the electric current would cut the hose in two and neither the firemen nor the owners of the property on fire would like that. We do put up "bridges" which carry fire hoses over our tracks so Cars may pass underneath them. But that is sometimes a slow process, so we don't hold fires to be our dish. When it is evident there will be considerable delay, we call on available Buses to shuttle around a big fire.

SIGNS OF SUMMER. The Starlight Roof of Roger Smith Hotel is being refurbished and changed around for opening on May 28. The dance floor will be enlarged and entrance altered so Myles Hallett's Band will be visible from every table . . . A new frozen cocktail—the "Coco-Conga," has been produced by Wine Steward Melvin of Lounge Riviera. It's made of cocoanut sugar, curacao, rum and apricot cordial . . . When Tommy Tucker's Band leaves Victory Room this Saturday night they'll go on a theater tour that'll take them to Chicago early in June, wind up with New York's Roxy in August.

REVUE PREVUE. Fats Waller's piano seances at the Brown Derby amount to a prevue of the new George Abbott musical, "Early to Bed" (due to open in Boston, in a few weeks). Fats has written tunes for the show and they sound splendificent—especially "Slightly Less Than Wonderful" and "Martinique."

ESQUIRISH—BUT DEFINITELY. Milton Davis and his Rainbow Room band are nothing less than elegant in their new summer suits of tan gabardine set off with burgundy crepe cravats—at $3 per each. . . . Hi Hat's Jack Neal is summery in all white at night and tan at the cocktail hour. His Banner Boys are flaunting beige and cream sports jackets. . . . THESE WOMEN FREE MEN TO FIGHT!

WE ARE the women who fill gaps in the ranks of vital war industries.

We knew that woman's part in this war had long passed the pink tea stage. Every woman who can be trained to do a job is needed now . . . this very minute.

Here's the measure of that job. Does it help Washington's war workers . . . a million and a half of them . . . every day?

Wherever a man has left his job to fight . . . a courageous woman is ready to take his place. They hammer rivets. They shape guns. They speed tanks and planes and bullets to their fighting men.

Those are the kinds of women we need today to fill the gaps in the ranks of one of the Nation's vital war industries . . . Washington's transit system.

If you're ready to keep the war workers working, to back up fighting men in your own family or near you . . . come in to the Capital Transit Company today. Start training in a job that really contributes to our war effort every minute you work at it.

'My Friend Flicka,' Capitol, A Refreshing Relaxation

Able Cast and Equine Star Endow Technicolor Film With Powerful Punch: Major Bowes' Best Unit on the Stage

THOSE DEPRIVED of their usual escape from official duties by the exigencies of war may enjoy a few weeks in the open by just sitting in the presence of "My Friend Flicka" for an hour and a half at Loew's Capitol Theater.

PRESTON FOSTER

This Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of the Mary O'Hara story, adapted to the screen by Francis Edwards Faragoh and Lillie Hayward and presented yesterday for the first time on a local screen, is vicariously exhilarating with cool western breezes, the sniff of fresh waters and the freedom of the open, all magnified in realistic effect by Technicolor photography at its best.

The story is as wholesome and refreshing as the rugged environment in which it is filmed. It is an utterly simple story, told in the simplest and most natural terms, of a boy and a horse and the influence each had on the other in the development of character, not only in themselves but in the elder adults who had misjudged both.

Master Ken McLaughlin was a day-dreaming youngster whose school report card caused his rancher-father to inquire anxiously how he went about it to score a zero in English. It seems that Master Ken was not so deficient as he was distracted by his apparently hopeless longing for a colt of his own. By the time he had ceased mooning over this seemingly vain yearning, time was up and not a word written on his test paper. So Mrs. McLaughlin, with typical maternal understanding persuaded her husband to give his son the pick of the herd to see what effect a little gratification of his dearest wish and responsibility would have on their son. The outlook appeared more bleak than ever when Master Ken chose the wildest filly of a "loco" strain so unamenable to breaking and training that the entire line was weeded out of the stock and "sold down the river" as good riddance—with the single exception of Flicka. What happened after that is the gist of too entertaining a tale to be divulged in advance to defraud future audiences of the full measure of enjoyment that awaits them.

While serving its purpose well as an object lesson in patience, kindliness, understanding and faith, "My Friend Flicka" goes in for no ponderous psychological profundities. There is in it an orderly progression of events that develops a strong element of suspense, no little excitement and that warm quality of sympathy that must spring up in the breast of every spectator who ever owned and loved a pet. The stampede of the horses being rounded up on the range, the episode of the prowling mountain lion, the growth of the attachment between the boy and his horse and their effect on the viewpoint of the hard-bitten stockman, all contribute bountifully to the engrossing quality of a direct and delightful study in relationships that compounds both a dramatic and an emotional punch of knockout power.

Equine Star No Mean "Actress"

Were it not that the human roles are so understandingly and efficiently played, one would be tempted to say that the "albino" filly cast in the title part is the star of the picture. This equine performer is a versatile lady, not averse to a little "mugging" now and then to steal a scene, with a fine command of both comedy and pathos and photogenic to the last hair in her tail. The remaining honors, all of which ordinarily should go to Roddy McDowall, as Ken, are about even. The richly gifted Roddy, with his persistent British accent, unfortunately seems strangely "out of the picture" as the son of the sturdy rancher, portrayed by Preston Foster, and his gentle wife, so sympathetically impersonated by Rita Johnson. The miscasting—for the ear, at least—of the precocious McDowall, who scored so marvelously in "How Green Was My Valley," is accentuated by the skill of Diana Hane in the assignment of his flip, kid sister whose observations spark the action with much of its most engaging comedy. Preston Foster has never given a more honest or forthright performance than in the role of the father, who learns as much from his son and his horse as they do from him. James Bell is foremost in the brief supporting cast, with Technicolor still entitled to stellar rating.

Maj. Edward Bowes' "Ninth Anniversary Revue" is by far the best he has ever brought to Washington. I say "brought" because, introduced by Carter T. Barron, Eastern division manager of Loew's, Inc., Major Bowes surprised yesterday's first audience by making a brief personal appearance on the stage and lauding not only his prize unit, but teeming Washington as well. With Danny Drayson as master of ceremonies, the Knapp Sisters, a vocal trio; the Harmaniacs, two boys of virtuoso ability on the harmonicas; Harry Robinson, the 79-year-old buck-and-wing dancer, seen here with an earlier unit; Mary Jane Owens and Eleanor Johnson, Washington's singers of hillbilly songs; Ray Kretzer, with as likely a repertoire of imitations as you'd care to hear; Bill McCullough, Swiss bellringer; Viola Layne, song impressionist; Danny Drayson, himself, in a tap routine that would do credit to a Fred Astaire or Bill Robinson, and Merrill Miller, with the best baritone voice heard on a local stage in many a day, rattle off an all-hit bill with gatling-gun speed. Every act is a show-stopper, especially the Misses Owens and Johnson, just back from a tour of 120 Army camps; Danny Drayson and Mr. Miller, who even rejuvenates the "Figaro" number from "The Barber of Seville."

The fact that scant room is left for auxiliary attractions will not impair the pleasure of those who long have been awaiting a program of such high spirit and uniform worth.

MAUREEN O'HARA,
newly pictured above, comes of the good old Celtic stock that gave rise to the saying that the McGonigles sprang from kings, and the O'Haras sprang at 'em! The O'Hara of Hollywood sprang into one of the choicest roles of 1943, opposite Charles Laughton in "This Land Is Mine," at RKO-Radio. It opened yesterday on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater

'This Land Is Mine,' Keith's, Affords Laughton a Rich Role

By Marjorie Kelly

"Love can be a terrible thing. It can commit crimes," says the tagline of "This Land Is Mine." And no drama since "The Silver Cord" has demonstrated this more forcefully than the somber photoplay which opened at R.-K.-O.-Keith's yesterday morning.

Una O'Connor, as Mrs. Emma Lory, is a mother who has sacrificed her own identity to her son. She has no other life, and allows him to have no other, than their relationship, and uses every device at her command, however obvious, to keep him from breaking away and establishing a normal life. The closest he has ever come to a healthy relationship, independent of his mother, is his admiring affection for a young fellow teacher at his school, played by Maureen O'Hara.

This is the situation when the Germans invade their town. And the way in which this private, personal problem of the schoolmaster merges with, and finally is solved by, the greater problem of his townspeople and his countrymen makes an absorbing and thoroughly believable story.

His Problems Adjusted

The schoolmaster, Albert Lory, as Charles Laughton plays him, is a man who has reached what psychiatrists call an equilibrium. He has made adjustments to his psychological difficulties, so that what ought to be a situation nearly intolerable no longer gives him great pain. Only when he breaks down during an air-raid and sobs in fear and terror, and afterwards when he writhes in shame trying to explain that he can't bear violence, do we see the frantic random movements of the neurotic, who can't be still because he finds no position that is tolerable. Through everything else he behaves with a weary dignity, withstanding his mother's frantic, morbidly engulfing love, the disrespectful antics and merciless badgering of his pupils, whom he cannot control, just as if they were all so many cats and puppies swarming over him.

The thing that tortures him is the conviction that he is a coward, and his fear that his young colleague, whom he loves without admitting it, even to himself, knows and despises him.

It is not until he has condemned himself to death by speaking his mind about the German occupation in the court, where he is being tried on an untrue charge, that he realizes there are different kinds of courage, that in spite of his shrinking nerves and horror of violence, he is not a coward.

Expressed in Action

A film like this might easily be a dark and dragging tale that might lose itself in labyrinths of introspective meanderings. Don't get the impression that it is such. The intellectual content is expressed, as it always must be in good theater, in action that never slows or drags. This is not so easily done as it may seem, and Jean Renoir adds greatly to his stature as a director by managing it.

Maureen O'Hara, George Sanders and Walter Slezak give capable performances in supporting roles, but Laughton's delineation of the sensitive teacher, and Una O'Connor's as the old woman whose soul is consumed by the dry rot of a wholly selfish life, overshadow all others.

A word should be said about the background music. You may not even notice it when you see the picture, it blends so unobtrusively and fits so well with the mood of the sequences in which it is used. Restraint in background music is a rare and admirable thing. C. Baleinikoff is responsible for this intelligent instance of its use.

One of Best of War

This story of a man no longer young, not dashing, not romantically heroic, but quiet, thoughtful, introverted, struggling along with the double burden of the problems he has always had and the additional ones the invasion brings him, and rising finally to heights of unpretentious heroism, gives one great hope for Hollywood. For this reviewer's money, it's the best war picture the present conflict has produced.

Short subjects include a "Doctors at War," which shows the training of physicians who are going to the front; a newsreel of Churchill's visit, and a pretty funny Donald Duck cartoon comedy.

Singer in 'Russia'

Among the latest Russian personalities to join the cast of "Russia" is the famous soprano, Mme. Nikitna, one time a star of the popular Leningrad theater known as the People's House.

Fan Has Stand-in

Because the 75-year-old fan, rented from a private collector for Ingrid Bergman's use in "Sartatoga Trunk," is so fragile she uses a "stand-in" for it while rehearsing.

Gossip From Gotham

New York, May 20.

Mme. Chiang Kai-shek and Pearl Buck were not the best of friends until an error at Hyde Park effected a brief reconciliation. Since then, the author of "The Good Earth" and "Dragon Seed" has visited Madame Chiang a second time . . . It started with Madame Chiang's arrival at Hyde Park for a short rest. Before she went to her room she told one of the employes: "Please get Pearl for me." The puzzled employe conferred with the others, who finally decided that the distinguished guest meant Pearl Buck—to whom a wire then was dispatched . . . Madame Chiang, however, had meant Pearl—one of her secretaries.

A second refugee conference, to counteract the criticism which followed the Bermuda meeting, will be held in this country shortly . . . Capt. Ted Lawson, the author of "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo," who lost a leg in the plane-crash after the bombing, was discharged from Walter Reed Hospital last weekend. He will not be discharged from the Army, but will take a new, important job to be assigned him . . . Sergt. Joseph Lash, the former secretary of the International Student Service and one-time protege of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, now is overseas—somewhere in the Pacific . . . The OWI has no plans, so far, to replace its resigned deputy, Milton Eisenhower.

A group of 15 WAACS, led by their young, pretty lieutenant, recently met at a midtown hotel, where they all crowded into one elevator. Because of the excess weight, the lift control was jammed, and the elevator slowly was lowered to the basement, where there was an emergency exit . . . The basement door, however, opens into a men's Turkish bath. The elevator-operator, a girl, warned them about this. The girls conferred quickly, and made their decision in true, military manner. "Line up, hold hands, and shut your eyes," their open-eyed lieutenant commanded. "Then follow me."

William Jay Schieffelin and Mortimer J. Hays will head a new information organization on United States foreign policy. Robert Bendiner, author of "The Riddle of the State Department" and Edgar Ansel Mowrer, will collaborate with them . . . Al Smith took the President of Bolivia to the top of the Empire State Building—but couldn't impress him with the dizzy heights. "My home in La Paz," the President reminded Smith, "is 13,000 feet above sea-level." . . . Canada Lee, who played the leading role in "Native Son," entertained at Madison Square Garden at the Knights of Pythias show. "This is the second time I've entered the Garden through the employes' entrance," Actor Lee revealed. "The first time was when I fought a six-round preliminary."

Two days before Robert E. Sherwood left for North Africa he dined with some friends who asked him about the trip—which had received frequent mention in the press. Sherwood, however, was secretive and denied that he had any plans for making any trips . . . When Sherwood started to put his coat on he suddenly grimaced in pain, because of the inoculations he had taken against yellow fever, malaria, smallpox, etc. . . . His friends then realized that the trip was imminent. "I must speak to my tailor about this," Sherwood tried to explain it. "He makes my sleeves so tight they hurt sometimes."

This is how history is made and corrected: A Washington hotel owner once operated a hotel in Dayton, where he became a friend of Orville Wright. The plane pioneer showed him some documents proving that the Wright brothers were the first to fly and not Professor Langley—who had conceded this. Yet the Smithsonian Institution was exhibiting the Langley plane as the first to make a flight, and the Wright brothers' plane was being exhibited in England . . . Orville said that it didn't matter to him personally—but that he wanted his late brother to receive the due credit . . . The hotel keeper then met Chief Justice Stone, who, by virtue of his office, is an official of the Smithsonian Institution. He told Stone about this, arranged for him to see the incontrovertible proof, and the Chief Justice arranged for the correction of the records and the exhibit of the Wright plane here.

George Jessel took Beverly Whitney to the Stork Club. "I'd marry you tomorrow, if I were 15 years younger," George told the singer, while placing his monocle in his eye, "yes, if I were 15 years younger—instead of slowly but surely becoming another Arliss" . . . Elia Kazan may direct William Saroyan's "Get Away, Old Man." "It's not the usual Saroyan fantasy," Kazan reports. "It has a beginning, a middle and an ending. One difficulty, though, is that in it a man dies and comes back to life" . . . Kelly & Adler, the Yacht Club boys, now touring the overseas camps, write from Cairo: "Imagine our surprise when he saw your Lyons Den published in the Stars & Stripes of the Middle East, in Cairo. Comes Now a Blue-Eyed Javanese!

Hollywood, Calif. May 20.—When Veronica Lake was suggested as the Javanese girl in "Dr. Wassell" the whole town held its sides—all except Cecil De Mille. When he was asked how he could put a blonde blue-eyed beauty into that part, he said, "Remember, I covered that in a line in 'Northwest Mounted' by saying, 'have you ever seen a blue-eyed squaw?'" Well, Veronica will keep her blue eyes, but cover up her golden crown with a wig, and she'll play the Javanese girl. Incidentally the studio's doing a burn at the frank interview and pictures of her in a national magazine . . . The Walter Wangers have taken the Whittaker house in Bel Air, principally because a cow and chickens went with it. The milk shortage is not going to catch Joan short handed . . . Irving Berlin tells me he and his boys will remain here until the middle of June. After that, it's anybody's guess.

VERONICA LAKE

For Idle Hands!

Ida Lupino will have a play on the boards come fall titled "Apple Blossom Farm." She's writing the music, and Andre Charlot will produce. Too bad that girl has no work to do! . . . Marjorie Main hands Grace George the biggest laugh. Marjorie drives herself to work for "Johnny Come Lately" in a sporty convertible in her bare feet, because she likes the feel of the motor vibrating against her tootsies. Says it's just as good as a massage . . . The Flying Fortress named for Diana Shore flew four times against the Nazis in the North African campaign and returned safely . . . Kenneth MacGowan is about to page Tallulah Bankhead for the rich journalist in "Life Boat" who starts out in a mink coat and diamonds and ends up with the face and body God gave her—and mighty little else.

Time's Ripe

So much wind has been taken out of Hitler that Abbot and Costello have given their writers the go sign to a screen play of "Nasty Nazi No. 1." They'd shelved it because the times were out of joint. But now "Heil Heel" looks mighty foolish. They may do it for Metro . . . If you want to lose weight, try and tie up with David Lechine, who's putting the cast of "North Star" through a Russian peasant dance. Only acrobats or actors could take it . . . Art Gilmore started petting the tame lion in the studio the other day, and for his devotion the lion bit him right through the hand . . . Louis Armstrong has an Abe Lincoln, a George Washington, and now a Teddy Roosevelt playing in his band . . . Our soldiers in Alaska want Bert Wheeler back. They sent him two parts of long underwear with a card—"to remind you we're waiting impatiently."

Miss Taylor's Second

Edward Gross bought the dramatic rights to Rosemary Taylor's best seller, "Chicken Every Sunday." It will be dramatized for the Broadway stage. It's a natural and could be called "Life With Mother," who ran a boarding house in Arizona after they'd moved there and father boasted he'd get rich. Well, mother and dad both hit the jackpot.

Life Insurance Sales Up 15% Here in April

By S. Oliver Goodman

Washington life insurance sales turned up sharply in April in contrast with declines through most of last year and in the first two months this year.

Soaring to $5,308,000, ordinary policy sales here in April were 15 per cent heavier than in the same 1942 month, according to the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau of Hartford. Volume in the first four months, however, aggregated $19,135,000, a decrease of 20 per cent. January and February sales were off sharply, but March showed a 5 per cent increase.

Nearby States enjoyed even sharper gains in insurance sales than D. C. did in April. Virginia's volume surged 25 per cent higher, while Maryland showed a 33 per cent upturn. The respective dollar volumes were: Maryland, $10,686,000; Virginia, $9,609,000.

Four-month sales of Virginia were down 14 per cent at $33,666,000, while Maryland's volume was off 16 per cent at $36,010,000.

After Paying Record Taxes

Individual Deposits, Cash Soar 4.8 Billion in Quarter

Individuals in the United States added $4,800,000,000 to their cash and bank deposits during the first quarter of 1943 after paying the largest tax bill in history, the Securities and Exchange Commission reported yesterday in its quarterly analysis of the volume and composition of savings in the United States.

In addition to cash and deposits, individuals added $2,600,000,000 to their holdings of Government bonds; 800 million dollars to their equity in private insurance, most of which was life insurance, and paid off 700 million dollars of debt other than mortgages. The survey shows that total savings declined slightly from a high point reached in the first quarter of 1942, reflecting a small decrease in income after taxes.

The commission reported that the most significant aspect of the pattern of savings during the quarter was the unusually high proportion of income which the public continued to put into currency and demand deposits. From the beginning of 1942 to the end of March, 1943, money in the hands of the public in the form of currency and demand deposits increased by an unprecedented sum of $15,500,000,000, a gain of more than 50 per cent since December, 1941.

The commission also reported that corporations, other than banks added $3,050,000,000 to their cash and deposits during the first quarter of 1943, by far the largest increase on record.

April Building Decreases 39% To $303,371,000

New York, May 20 (AP).—Construction contracts in 37 Eastern States declined 11 per cent in April from the preceding month, and were 39 per cent below April, 1942, F. W. Dodge Corp. reported today.

Contracts for last month totalled $303,371,000.

April's construction represented mixed trends, the report said, with heavy engineering contracts totaling $127,723,000, or 4 per cent higher than in March and 25 per cent greater than April, 1942.

Residential building in April amounted to $79,434,000, an increase of 11 per cent over March, but a decline of 51 per cent from April, 1942.

The heaviest decline was reported in nonresidential building contracts, due to a drop in the manufacturing plant contract total from $145,064,000 in April, 1942, to $40,652,000 last month.

Childs Co. Plan Is Withdrawn

New York, May 20 (AP).—Directors of Childs Co., restaurant chain, announced yesterday after a meeting that insufficient debentures had been deposited under its exchange plan which would in effect have extended the maturity of the loan, due April 1 this year.

"Accordingly Childs Co. has directed the exchange agent to return those debentures of 1943 which have been deposited," an announcement said.

Earlier this month E. C. Field, president, said that $2,891,000 principal amount of the debentures had been deposited for exchange, leaving $1,599,000 unexchanged. Under the exchange offer, holders would have received debentures due in 1957.

Byrd Committee Asks Liquidation Of HOLC by 1945

By the Associated Press

The Byrd Committee recommended yesterday the complete liquidation of Home Owners' Loan Corp. holdings by June 30, 1945.

Commending the administration of the HOLC Act, the joint congressional committee on reduction of nonessential Federal expenditures said the Government "should respond to a period of national economic prosperity just as quickly as it did to a period of depression."

The report, submitted by its chairman, Senator Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia, also recommended that the HOLC immediately plan, and for the next two years and two months execute, "an intensive campaign among the mortgagors and lessees to induce them to increase their equity in their homes, to buy them outright, or to transfer their loans to a local home-financing institution."

C. & N. W. Asks Change In Reorganization Plan

Chicago, May 20 (AP).—Luther M. Walter and Helen W. Munsert, attorneys for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co., today announced they had filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a petition asking for reopening, further hearing and modification of the road's reorganization plan.

"This commission is the only body that can make a change in the plan of reorganization to reflect present-day conditions where substantial changes have taken place since the commission approved a plan of reorganization," the petition stated.

Stocks Close Uneven After Early Climb

By the Associated Press

New York, May 20.—Stocks found nice going in the early part of today's market but encountered enough profit taking bumps toward the finish to cut initial gains of a point or more and put many steels, rails, motors and blue chips in the minus column.

The principal excuse for lightening of commitments was the spread of walk-outs in soft coal mining areas despite extension of the union labor truce in this industry. Sporadic strikes in other fields also tended to chill buying contingents to some extent.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .1 of a point at 50.8. Final advances and declines were pretty evenly split. The rail composite suffered a recession of .3 of a point while that for the industrials and utilities was without variation. It was a somewhat broader market, 927 individual issues being traded. Of these, 350 were up, 342 down, and 235 unchanged.

A constructive indicator was seen in the fact that the day's main activity was in the first hour when trends were rising. Dealings slackened appreciably as prices gave ground. Transfers for the full stretch amounted to 1,298,300 Wednesday.

The amusement group was stimulated by reports of expanding box office receipts. Pleasing dividends failed to spur most stocks concerned. Both steels and rails were dimmed by thoughts of possible fuel shortages.

Carrier bonds edged upward. At Chicago wheat moved ahead ⅜ to 1¼ cents a bushel and hogs were steady. Cotton was 25 cents a bale higher to off 15 cents.

Gulf Oil Block May Be Offered

New York, May 20 (AP).—The New York Sun said today Gulf Oil Corp. had filed a registration statement with the Securities & Exchange Commission preliminary to making a secondary offering of 754,500 common shares worth approximately 38 million dollars at current market prices.

The Mellon Securities Corp. mentioned in the statement as the principal underwriter of the proposed offering, which does not involve issuance of new stock, was also listed as owner of 546,400 of the shares, the Sun said.

"After the sale of this stock the Mellon family (of Pittsburgh) will still own about 60 per cent of the stock" of Gulf Oil, the paper said.

Week's Rail Loadings Show 3.9% Increase

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday that 848,522 cars of revenue freight were loaded during the week ended last Saturday.

This was an increase of 31,971 cars, or 3.9 per cent, compared with the preceding week: An increase of 9,468 cars, or 1.1 per cent, compared with a year ago, and a decrease of 12,280 cars, or 1.4 per cent, compared with two years ago.

Bosox Beat Indians in Double Bill, 2-1, 7-4

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

That Norfolk sailor team which is coming to Griffith Stadium to battle the Nats in The Post's war bond game on Monday night would seem to be lucky stiffs as well as a good ball team.

The United States Navy could have sent a task force out to bring in the pitcher best calculated to beat the Washington club and land nobody as clever at the job as Charley Wagner, who is already under contract to the Norfolk Naval Training Station. Wagner, the former member of the Red Sox staff, has a contract as a seaman at the Norfolk base.

POVICH

It's some kind of a trick of fate that Norfolk, with a game against the Nats coming up, should have on its squad a pitcher, who during the past two seasons, has been the toughest guy in the American League for the Washington club to beat. Wagner is that guy. He licked the Nats five straight times for the Red Sox in 1941, without a defeat, and last year he broke even in two starts against the Nats.

That totals up to five victories for Wagner against the Washington club in six games during 1941-42, and of all the hundreds of thousands of men in the United States Navy, it happens that Norfolk is in possession of the one fellow who is the best bet to beat the Nats.

Wagner hasn't been a jinx only to the Nats, incidentally. In 1941 he was poison, too, to the Athletics. He beat them eight times in succession without a defeat. And last season when he was with the Red Sox, Wagner claimed the Detroit Tigers for his very own. He licked the Tigers five times in a row, losing none, the records show.

So the Norfolk sailors are tossing quite a guy at the Nats, and they're not doing badly for a supporting cast. Wagner will be surrounded by as good an outfit as he ever had behind him with the Red Sox. In fact, the presence of Phil Rizzuto, Benny McCoy, Dom DiMaggio, Don Padgett and Vince Smith on that Norfolk team in various positions would seem to put Wagner in better surroundings than he ever knew as a big leaguer.

There is ample precedent for the spell Wagner has held over the Nats during his big league career. Certain pitchers have long exercised certain charms of certain opposition. They could be licked regularly by other clubs in the league, but against at least one team they were poison.

Urban Shocker, when he was with the Browns and the Yankees, could pitch against the Nats and laugh. They rarely beat him. Particularly did Shocker baffle Goose Goslin, the Nats' best hitter of that era. He used to throw Goslin his slow ball, and when two were out and there were two strikes on the Goslin, Shocker used to throw his slow one to Goslin and start walking off the field in the same motion, knowing that the Goose would strike out.

Until he hurt his arm last year, Thornton Lee was perhaps the best left-hander in the league while he was with the White Sox. But Lee wasn't always a winning pitcher. In fact, the only item that kept him in the league when he was a rookie with the Cleveland Indians was his ability to beat the Washington club.

Lee was pure poison to the Nats. He couldn't beat anybody else in the league except Washington. He won three games for the Indians during the 1936 season, and all three were against the Nats. It wasn't so important to beat Washington in that era, however, and Lee couldn't last with the Indians on the basis of such limited talents. They traded him off to the White Sox with no regrets, at the time.

There used to be an old left-hander in the league named Walter Miller. He had been with the White Sox, and was supposed to be washed up when Cleveland signed him. But he always could beat the Nats. Cleveland started him twice during a series at Griffith Stadium in the middle twenties. Twice in four days he pitched four-hit shutouts against the Nats.

When the Pirates knocked Freddie Fitzsimmons out of the box the other day, it was the first time in four seasons that they had licked that pitcher. Meanwhile Fitz had beaten 'em in 13 straight games. Another Pirate nemesis was Art Nehf. He licked 'em 13 times in a row when he was pitching for the Giants.

Originally, Freddie Hutchinson, formerly of the Tigers, was supposed to pitch for the Norfolk team against the Nats. Hutchinson came down with a sore arm and couldn't make it. The sailors thus were compelled to pitch a guy named Charley Wagner who, as we were saying, licked the Nats five times in a row in 1941. The choice of Wagner by the Norfolk team apparently wasn't a very painful one.

Twin Defeat Drops Tribe Behind Nats

Peacock's Single In Tenth Decides Opener; 10 Hurlers Work in Nightcap

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, May 20.—Boston took both ends of a doubleheader from the Cleveland Indians today, winning a 10-inning opener, 2 to 1, topping it with a 7 to 4 triumph in a finale that saw 10 pitchers in action.

The twin defeat dropped the Tribe to third place, giving the Washington Nationals who have been idle in St. Louis for the last four days, second place by a half game, one and a half games behind the leading Yankees.

The Indians used six hurlers in the nightcap as the Red Sox punched out 11 hits, four of them two-baggers. Boston called on three relief pitchers after Kendall Chase faltered in the seventh.

After their tenth inning victory in the first game, the Sox romped into the second half of the bargain bill with a three-run spree in the first inning, and scored again in the third, eighth and ninth.

Chase yielded five hits in six innings and then gave way to Mike Ryba, who gave two hits, two runs and a walk while getting one man out in the seventh. Mace Brown was on duty for the last portion of the seventh and got credit for the win before being replaced by Yank Terry, who finished the game.

The parade over the Cleveland mound started with Pete Center, who lasted less than an inning. Vernon Kennedy, Joe Heving, Ray Poat, Mike Naymick and Al Milnar were other Indian flingers.

Poat was charged with the defeat.

In the opener, Catcher Johnny Peacock singled John Lazar home with the winning run in the tenth, pairing it with a first-inning tally for the victory. Cleveland's lone first game score was made in the fifth inning when Oris Hockett doubled off the rightfield wall to score Buddy Rosar.

Southpaw Oscar Judd pitched the first-game victory, giving up seven hits, while his mates nicked Jack Salveson and Allie Reynolds for the same number.

Rest Cure for Stephens

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

His knee found to be sprained instead of fractured, Vernon Stephens, star shortstop for the St. Louis Browns, takes it easy as his injury responds to treatment. He hurt the knee last Sunday against the New York Yankees and expects to be back in the lineup within a week or 10 days.

Phils Shut Out Cubs, 3-0, 2-0, for 5 in Row

By the United Press

Philadelphia, May 20.—Those rambunctious "New Deal" Phillies ran their winning streak to five straight today by handing the Chicago Cubs a pair of shutouts, 3 to 0 and 2 to 0, in a doubleheader before 3429 at Shibe Park.

The double triumph, coupled with Brooklyn's win over St. Louis, put the fourth-place Phils only half game behind the third-place Cardinals. It also gave the Phils a clean sweep of the four-game series with the Cubs, who now have dropped nine in a row.

Four-hit pitching by both Charley Fuchs and Southpaw Al Gerheauser, backed by opportune hitting and good fielding, was the spark that enabled the Phils to chalk up their longest winning streak in seven years. Back in August, 1936, they managed to win six straight.

Meantime the Phils got a run in the second on Earl Naylor's walk and Merrill May's two bagger. In the sixth Danny Litwhiler doubled, reached third on Jim Wasdell's infield single and scored as Babe Dahlgren hit into a double play. In

Nats Depart Without Game In St. Louis

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Post Staff Writer

St. Louis, May 20.—For the first time in the 24-year baseball career of E. B. Eynon, jr., secretary-treasurer of the Nats, he led a Washington ball club out of town tonight without having played a single game of a scheduled four-day, four-game series with the Browns.

The Browns management didn't officially call off the scheduled double-header today until noon but they were only kidding. To say Sportsman's Park was unplayable would be a masterpiece of understatement.

Eynon called Chicago, where the A's and White Sox were scheduled and after learning that game was postponed the Nats beat it to Chicago a day ahead of time, exchanging hotel rooms with the Athletics, who came here.

The postponement was the eleventh of the season for the Browns, who now face a mountainous stack of double-headers. The Nats already have three games scheduled within 18 hours, their next trip here, so this series will have to be played on the third and last visit in August.

The August visit originally called for two games Sunday, Monday open, a night game Tuesday, afternoon game Wednesday and Thursday open. The revised schedule is two Sunday one Monday, a twilight-night double-header on Tuesday, one Wednesday and a double-header Thursday. If any of these games are postponed they must be transferred to the Browns' last visit to Washington.

The only exercise the Nats have had since Monday morning is pushing themselves away from the table three times a day, but they have consolation that the other American League clubs have also been idle.

Manager Ossie Bluege has made a slight alteration in his pitching plans, nominating Dutch Leonard to face the White Sox tomorrow night in Chicago, with Ewald Pyle going in Saturday afternoon's game and Early Wynn and Alex Carrasquel on Sunday in a doubleheader.

Jim Meris, the rookie pitcher who was slated to face the Chisox on Saturday had the Nats played today, is satisfied to wait for another day. Meris has lost games on the last three Saturdays, two of them not exactly his fault.

Phil Fans Rush Orders For World Series Tickets

Philadelphia, May 20 (AP).—Four local fans applied to the office of the fast-stepping Phillies today for 1943 World Series tickets.

"Don't think we are overconfident," they wrote. "We know the Phils can do it."

Dodgers Edge Cards, 5 to 2; Even Series

Mort Cooper Walks Seven, Gives Eight Hits; Melton Turns in Victory

By Judson Bailey

Associated Press Sports Writer

Brooklyn, May 20.—After seeing nothing but southpaw pitching for three days, the Brooklyn Dodgers finally met up with a right-hander today and the sight of Mort Cooper was so welcome that they whipped the St. Louis Cardinals, 5 to 2, to gain an even split in their four-game series.

Cooper, the leading pitcher in the National League last year and winner of three games against one defeat before today, was ineffective although he fanned seven men. He gave up seven walks and eight hits and lost the decision in the first inning when the Dodgers scored three unearned runs.

In contrast, Frank (Rube) Melton went to the mound on two days rest after curbing the Cardinals, 1 to 0, in a twilight game Monday and had no trouble except in the fourth frame when St. Louis scored both its runs.

The Dodgers loaded the bases in the first on two walks and an error by Lou Klein and tallied once on a fly by Paul Waner and twice on a tremendous double by Billy Herman. They loaded the bases again in the fifth on two singles and a walk and this time Cooper committed a balk to let in a run. Then Dolph Camilli opened the seventh with a triple high against the rightfield scoreboard and came home when Debs Garms and Buster Adams, St. Louis outfielders, collided under Herman's fly, which was scored as a double.

$15,000 Offer Tops Bids For Presidential Box Seat

The bidding for the Presidential box at The Post's War Bond game on Monday night at Griffith Stadium yesterday reached a new high figure of $15,000.

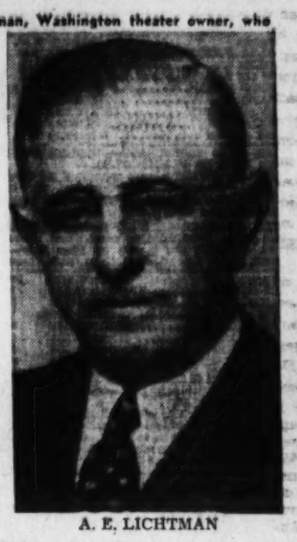
That was the offer of A. E. Lichtman, Washington theater owner, who forwarded to The Post a check purchasing bonds to the $15,000 value.

"Your game between the Norfolk sailor team and the Washington club with admission limited to bond buyers is a patriotic undertaking by The Post and should certainly stimulate bond sales," said Mr. Lichtman.

The honor of throwing out the first ball from the flag-bedecked White House box also goes to the highest bidder for the seats, and Mr. Lichtman added:

"In the event my bid is not topped, I would waive the honor of throwing out the first ball. That is a privilege which I would be glad to turn over to any of our wounded war veterans of your selection."

Mr. Lichtman, long a patron of sports in Washington, is the sponsor of the Washington Lichtman Bears, who last season won the world's professional basketball championship.



A. E. LICHTMAN

Lichtman's bid increases to $30,000 the offers now received for the Presidential box. Edgar Morris made the original $5,000 offer, which was topped by the $10,000 bid of Pat Regal. Both Morris and Regal invited others to top their bids and announced that they were buying bonds to the amount of their bids, notwithstanding any failure to obtain the White House box.

Lew Hanbury in Test Tonight With Callura

By Al Costello

Post Staff Writer

The second local boy within a span of five days to get a crack at national fistic recognition, Lew Hanbury, climbs into Uline Arena ring tonight with N. B. A. featherweight champion Jackie Callura in what shapes up as the best fight Promoter Goldie Ahearn has yet concocted for Liberty A. C. followers.

Ten rounds is the distance the rough-tough Hanbury, barely a year out of amateur ranks, will be asked to go with the boss featherweight, himself a toughie who scorns science in favor of punch-trading.

Their styles make for a fight that should be acton from start to finish. Both are the type of fighter who seldom take a back step, each favoring the boring in system and each more than willing to trade punch for punch.

Lew Has Fine Record

Lew, in his scant year of pro nose punching, has won 12 of 14 bouts. His greatest triumph to date was his return victory over Jimmy Phillips, otherwise known as Jiggs McKnight, after Phillips had pre-

Manager Sewell Given Release by Browns—as Player

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, May 20.—Manager Luke Sewell of the St. Louis Browns, was unconditionally released today—as a player.

He was on the roster as a catcher and it was necessary to go through the formality of getting waivers from the other clubs before his name could be removed from the active list in getting down to the 25-player limit.

The Browns also optioned two young pitchers, Fred Sanford and Sid Peterson.

slogan, "Every fan a patriot."

Choice tickets to the game are still available, however, in every value except that of the $200 bonds. Box seats for bonds of that value have already been exhausted.

Still on sale are thousands of the choicest grandstand seats which go hand-in-hand with bonds of the $50 value, and the $25 seats in the right field and center field pavilions. Available, too, are a dwindling supply of $100 and $1000 box seats.

To the buyer of a bond, there is no further cost, and all tickets to the game are tax exempt.

Purchasers of bonds have their choice of converting their exchange tickets into reserved seats either at The Post or the Griffith Stadium ticket windows. Every seat in the stadium is a reserved seat.

The first feature of the pre-game show which will start at 8 p.m. will be the clowning act of Al Schacht, most famed of baseball's funny men. Announcement of the complete game ceremonies featuring Bing Crosby and Kate Smith will be made tomorrow.

Tickets at Post

The Post as well as Griffith Stadium today becomes a receiving center for exchange tickets to Monday's war bond game.

Ticket windows in The Post lobby will be open from 12 noon to 8 p. m. daily, including Sunday. Holders of exchange tickets of all types may turn them in for reserved seats.

Nats Purchase Kampouris From Dodgers

Alex Kampouris, veteran National League infielder, last night became the property of the Nats in a straight cash deal with the Brooklyn Dodgers, Nats' Owner Clark Griffith announced. The sum was not disclosed.

Kampouris, Griff said, will be carried as a utility infielder and pinch hitter. He bats right handed. He is the only Greek in the major leagues and broke in with the Cincinnati Reds. He served with the New York Giants before Brooklyn secured him when the Giants farmed him out to their Newark farm club.

Kampouris is a polished fielder and although not a .300 hitter, hits a long ball. He batted .286 in 10 games with the Dodgers last year. He is 31 years old.

Umpire Sears Better

New York, May 20 (AP).—Ziggy Sears, National League umpire who is recovering from pneumonia, is expected to return to work next week when the Eastern clubs start their swing through the West, Chief of Staff Bill Klem said today. Sears was stricken in Boston about two weeks ago.

Lombardi's Dad Dies

New York, May 20 (AP).—Ernie Lombardi, New York Giants' catcher, received word today that his father died last night in Oakland, Calif. He left immediately by plane to attend the funeral.

Sunset Boy, Even Money, Runs Third

By Walter Haight
Post Staff Writer

Charles Town, W. Va., May 20.—In a head finish, Tommy Rodrock's Mae Case won a photo verdict from Joe Bruno's Olympian in the sixth event, best race of the day. A disappointing third in the field of six was S. W. Labrot's Sunset Boy, the even money favorite, in this test of about 7 furlongs. The ban on pleasure driving held down the crowd and less than 2500 saw the day's eight-race program.

Mae Case, winner at Pimlico this spring, returned her backers an $8.20 mutuel and the 3-year-old daughter of Case Ace was clocked in 1:25 3/5 over a fast track.

Jockey Stanley Austin allowed Mae Case to settle into stride and saved ground with her as Olympian set the pace accompanied by Sunset Boy. On the backstretch, Sunset Boy faltered and Olympian established what appeared to be a winning lead. However, Mae Case moved through on the inside of Sunset Boy and gradually wore down the pacemaker.

In the stretch drive Austin steered to the outside of the leader and Mae Case took a brief lead approaching the wire.

Jockey Buddy Root was the saddle hero of the afternoon. Already leading rider at the meeting, Root added four winners to his string. He started the ball rolling on a $150.20 daily double when he won the first event with E. Persanti's Stolen Sweets, a $26 shot. War Glenn, owned by H. G. Tonkin, putting the finishing touches on the "double" and brought his individual backers a $5 mutuel.

Root rode Happy Hannah, owned by Mrs. E. D. Sowers of Washington to victory in the fourth race and came back in the seventh to score with S. H. Hall's Outcome, a $7 proposition, then rode Mrs. P. G. Simms' Silver Beam to win a $9.40 mutuel in the eighth.

Selections at Charles Town
Dear Al:

Jockey George Acosta is hobbling around on crutches due to a badly sprained ankle suffered when Blue Covert threw him leaving the gate last Wednesday. The plater Well Allright was injured in a stall accident, which accounts for the scratch yesterday. Bill Schamerhorn, starter at Hagerstown and other Maryland half-milers, was a visitor yesterday. The ban on pleasure driving may be a blow to this track. However, there are upward of 1000 roomers in Charles Town and nearby homes, who may be enough to keep up the action. The horsemen are snapping their fingers and hoping. This meeting has been a godsend so far for them and many will face bankruptcy if racing halts. Little Reggie Root, son of Jockey Buddy Root, is an excited youngster these days. He says the Indians are coming down the Shenandoah River and he's busy organizing an army to meet them. Reggie has his popgun all shined and so far has enlisted two assistant starters, four jockeys and a Stevens counterman. I tried to sign up, but Reggie just looked at me and smiled. Abner Rissler, who called the horses to the track when this oval first opened, is back on the job as bugler. The press box boys took the hunch and played Bugler in the first race, but the plater finished second. L. M. Torreyson, former trainer of Chief Teddy, Little Mowlee and others, is now a private at Camp Mackall. His brother, J. E. Torreyson and Paul Mason are taking care of the horses for the duration. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—Brocade comes from a barn full of fit ones and I'm going to string along in this open affair. Shanty Boat goes well over this track. Chiff Chaff for the show end.

Second race—Maiden Fern deserves another chance and appears best of these. Tacaro Ginny has been improving and will be a threat. Air Defense is better than shown.

Third race—Stadium will be hard to whip in this company if taken off the Reserve list. Misty Eye has speed and is dangerous. Indignation should take part of the pay.

Fourth race—Manny B has speed and appears fit. Looks like the right one in this company. Gray Flash won here and is a threat. My Guide for the show end.

Fifth race—Time Play failed over this course recently but will be right there in this company. Gendarme's last was good. Grouchy for the minor money.

Sixth race—High Standard gets the best of the post positions in this open race and I'm going to string along. Residue whipped the top one at Pimlico. Janegri to take care of the others.

Seventh race—War Bonnet has speed and gets my call in this sprint. Zac Pam gets in light and belongs close. Rough Amos for the remainder.

Eighth race—Lady Longworth moved abruptly in her last and seems to be on the verge of winning.. I'm going to take my chances. Renowned and Celtic Knight to fill out the money circle.

Substitute race—If this event is used, I'll take Mitza, Honeymiad and Red Wings.

Wilson Nine To Tackle Roosevelt

Local sports fans may be seeing a preview of the interhigh play-offs this afternoon when undefeated Eastern, currently leading the series, plays second-place Tech on the Ramblers' diamond at 4 o'clock. Two other series games were listed but the Coolidge-Central affair was moved up because of the finals in the interhigh track meet. The other game today finds Woodrow Wilson, the only other team with a play-off chance, visiting Anacostia.

Other games today are Gonzaga at Western, Devitt at Bethesda-Chevy Chase, St. Andrew's at Landon, in an Interstate Academic Conference game, and Montgomery Blair at Roosevelt. The Northern Virginia track championship will be decided at Balston also today when Washington-Lee, George Washington High and Fairfax get together. The Generals are heavily favored.

Coach "Woody" Smitherman will either call on Dave Leonardumi, who had a rough time against Roosevelt earlier this week, or Clint Speiser for Eastern. Speiser, in all probability, will get the call. Milo Quail, Trainers' ace, will carry Coach Bob Walker's hopes to the hill. Tech has lost two of its regulars, due to ineligibility scholastically. Bob Brewer, one of the series' better shortstops, and Jack Ray are the boys who have been lost. Buddy Chipman, a first-baseman, has been moved to short, with Quail covering the initial sack. Jack Brenchfield will play first, with Quail on the mound. If Tech wins, it will be in a tie with Eastern for first place.

Wilson must win its tilt today with Anacostia and then defeat Eastern next Tuesday to remain in the running. Either Jack Ogle, who has twirled three straight interhigh wins, or Stu Brown will hurl for the Tigers against either Joe Himmelberg or Harry Swisher for the Indians. Himmelberg has pitched several good games for Coach Tommy Nolan and could possibly give Wilson a lot of trouble if he goes. Ogle has allowed only three runs (two of which were unearned) and 12 safeties in 27 innings in series encounters. Wilson has suddenly found its batting eye, having sent 23 runs across in its last two interhigh games.

The Reel Dope:

Rockfish Are Running Here In Our Potomac Back Yard

By Tom Moore McBride
The Post's Fishing Editor.

Prime bit of fishing news for the weekend again comes from the Potomac, where the rockfish are appearing in quantity in the pan-sized category and in substantial numbers in the "lunker" class.

Taking it by and large, this spring has been a banner fishing season in the Potomac. Not only because of the number of persons fishing it because they couldn't get to fishing grounds farther afield and thus taking a larger number of fish than usual, but also by token of the numbers of fish available for them.

First, early in April, it was the run of white perch, which ran in almost unprecedented numbers and size and could be taken by the hundreds by even inexperienced anglers.

Before the large perch left, the hickory shad made their appearance, striking almost any shiny metal bait and affording a field day for both fly and bait casters. They're still in the vicinity of Chain Bridge, though not in as large numbers as earlier this season.

Then came the herring, one of the biggest runs in several years, though far from the old-timers' tales of having trouble rowing in the river through the thick shoals of 'em. And anybody was able to take them with snag hooks. They're still around, too, and will be for another week or two.

There was a small run of true or white shad, and these, too, are affording some sport for fly and bait casters who can lure them with small spoons.

And now the rocks are running.

They're a bit ahead of schedule, and catches of the gamesters probably would have been greater if more people had been fishing for them, for rock fishing is no hit or miss drop-your-bait-and-pull-in-the-fish procedure. Even when they're running well, you have to fiddle with the ordinary rock to hook him.

For the pan-sized fish—most plentiful around Chain Bridge—your best bet will be to use no sinker, a small wire hook, and bloodworms for bait. Strip out a few feet of line and let it drift into an eddy—not the current. When the rock hits, don't strike him at first. Let him take out 12 to 18 inches of line before you jerk, and then don't try to horse him in, because rockfish have tender mouths, and the hook may pull out.

The larger rocks—and some have been taken up to 32 pounds—have been caught mostly just a short distance above Key Bridge, about 150 yards out from the Virginia side. An ounce sinker and 2/0 or 3/0 O'Shaughnessy or offset hooks, 10 inches apart above the sinker. Again, don't try to set your hook when you feel the first strike, but let the lunker run a bit. If still fishing, give your line a gentle tug now and then. Even better results are obtained by drifting.

There are some big catfish being taken in the vicinity of Fletcher's boathouse, at Stop 10 on the Glen Echo line. H. C. Harding, 3804 Vezey Street Northwest, for example, was fishing from shore, using a rod and reel for the first time, and caught seven, one an 8-pounder. Plenty larger than that have been caught during the past week.

Lew Hanbury In Test With Jackie Callura

viously inflicted one of Lew's two defeats. Against the shifty but not too hard punching Phillips, Hanbury showed he was fully recovered from a broken hand that cost him a bout with Willie Pep, New York's recognized titlist, and prime rival of Callura.

Lew, his followers are confident, will not be bulled by the hard-hitting and rough Callura. He will, they contend, bull right back. As a matter of fact, the rougher the going, the better Hanbury likes it.

Nor will Hanbury be awed by being in the ring with a king as was the case last Monday with Danny Petro when he let former champion Jackie Wilson make him fight the sort of battle he (Wilson) wanted. Lew has been in the ring with "Hammering Henry" Armstrong when "The Hammer" was training here for his bout with Saverio Turiello and did very well by himself, winning praise from Henry. It was Armstrong, Goldie Ahearn insists, who advised Hanbury to take the match.

Looms As Typical Brawl

At any rate, as a fight it should be a typical brawl—as is usually the case when two tenacious scrappers such as these two get into the same ring.

As a special added attraction to take the place of the postponed semifinal which would have brought together Frankie Wills and his conqueror of last week, J. R. Lewis, Billy Banks, popular local Negro lightweight, hits the comeback trail in a six-rounder, meeting Clyde English, of New York. Wills, still not recovered from a six-week illness which he blames for his upset by Lewis, requested the postponement so that he could get in tip-top shape for the return bout this time.

Joe Jeanette, former Golden Gloves battler from the Merrick Boys' Club, will make his pro debut, meeting Willie Lewis, of Baltimore, in a bantamweight scrap. Jeannette has shown to advantage in amateur ranks and is rated a comer. Another six finds Joe Agosto of New York meeting Lee Rosan of Baltimore. Two four rounders will be announced at ring time.

the seventh Fuchs was safe on an error. He stole second, took third on Danny Murtaugh's single and raced home on Paul Busby's squeeze bunt.

In the afterpiece the Phils got their two runs in the third inning off Dick Barrett. Murtaugh singled and dashed to third on Busby's sacrifice when the Cubs left the bag unguarded. Litwhiler singled him home and scored the second run a few minutes later on Ed. Stanky's wild throw.

Incidentally, Danny Litwhiler made his first error in two years when he fumbled Harry Lowrey's single in the eighth of the nightcap. His feat of playing errorless ball in 151 games last year set a major league record.

Breaking a scoreless tie in the third inning with six big runs, featured by timely hits by Bob Brewer and Cris Chappell, Bethesda-Chevy Chase nine yesterday thumped National Training School, 10-2, at Bethesda-Chevy Chase field.

Meanwhile, Haven Rettew was allowing the Trainers only four scattered hits and did not permit a run until the fifth. The victory was the eighth in 12 starts for Bethesda-Chevy Chase.

Dodgers Release Rookie, Veteran

Brooklyn, May 20 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers today released Pat Ankenman, shortstop, to the Montreal Club of the International League, under an optional agreement and released outright Ray Hayworth, veteran catcher.

That pruning reduced the Dodgers' squad of active players to 26, so one more must be turned adrift before tomorrow to comply with the 25-man player-limit rule. Ankenman was purchased last March from the New Orleans Club of the Southern Association. Hayworth was engaged as a free agent last winter.

Novikoff Finally Comes to Terms

Chicago, May 20 (AP).—Phillip K. Wrigley, owner of the Chicago Cubs, said tonight that holdout Lou Novikoff had come to terms and was en route from his Los Angeles home to join the club.

Jack Favored In Bout With Montgomery

By Sid Feder
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, May 20.—After taking on lightweight champions five times in two years, Philadelphia Bob Montgomery finally gets a shot at the championship tomorrow night in Madison Square Garden against Beau Jack, the one-time shoe shine boy from Georgia.

This 15-round fuss for the New York half of the 135-pound crown marks the return of boxing to the Garden

As a result—and picking up in this first summer "sock" show where they left off in last winter's million-dollar season—the fans are expected to chip in to a $75,000 pot. In fact, Promoter Mike Jacobs won't be at all disappointed if some 18,000 show up.

The Jumping Jack is a little slambang buzzsaw kind of a clouter who skyrocketed out of Dixie's "battle royal" rings a couple of years ago. He boomed up the trail so fast from the time he decided to switch his career from blacking boots to doing the same to eyes that he not only has grebbed the lightweight crown, but also has knocked off two such ranking welterweights as Fritzie Zivic and Henry Armstrong.

Grays Prevail, 6-0; Take Lead

Washington's Homestead Grays moved up to first place in the Negro National League last night when they defeated "Mule" Suttles' Newark Eagles, 6-0, at Griffith Stadium, before 6000

The beginning was the second, "Josh" Gibson leading off with a double, moving to third on Easterling's sacrifice, and coming home on Sam Bankhead's triple to left. Judd Wilson's long fly brought Bankhead home, and Spencer, whom Day walked, came home on Wright's double to the rightfield wall. Wright scored the fourth run on Watkin's error.

Maryland, Hopkins to Clash In Lacrosse Battle Tomorrow

Tilt to Have Direct Bearing on National Championship; Nine Meets Curtis Bay

The University of Maryland lacrosse team will wind up its current season at College Park on Saturday when it meets the Johns Hopkins ten of Baltimore in a game which will have an important bearing on the national title.

The Old Liner baseball team will play the Curtis Bay Coast Guard outfit the same afternoon.

Lacrosse squads from Maryland and Hopkins have already met twice during this calendar year. Last spring Hopkins downed the Old Liners, 7 to 5, but during the summer the latter handed the Jays 8-to-1 and 8-to-0 defeats.

Both Maryland and Hopkins need to win this game to stay in the national title picture, and the winner will be tied with Navy for honors—at least until the following Saturday, when the Middies meet Army. Both Maryland and Hopkins have lost only one game each, to Navy. Navy in turn was beaten by Princeton.

Coach Al Heagy during practice sessions this week attempted to perfect a defense which would stop Tommy Zink and Henely Guild, who have scored 20 and 17 goals respectively for the Jays this season.

Saints Rally To Win, 11-4, Clinch Title

Crashing through with a six-run rally in the sixth, St. Alban's yesterday turned a tight ball game into a rout and clinched the Interstate Academic Conference championship by defeating a stubborn Sidwell-Friends Nine, 11-4, on the home diamond.

It was the third straight victory without a loss in conference competition and closed the season for the Saints with a record of nine wins, two losses and a deadlock. Trimble, Saints' mound ace, was rushed to Cromwell's rescue in the fifth when Friends' tied the score and fanned six to save the victory.

Shootin' Pete

Detroit (A.P.).—Pete Provost spent 45 years as a trapper in northern Michigan woods and never paid much attention to learning, but he did want to help the war effort by going into a factory. Asked to read letters on an eyesight examination card, he replied: "I can't read them letters, but give me a rifle and I'll shoot out every one of them." He got the job.

Manpower Shortage

Atlanta.—Lieut. Charlotte Tonis expected to take a soldier's job when she joined the WAAC but, says she, "I never expected to substitute for a bride's daddy."

A WAAC sergeant in Lieutenant Tonis' company at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., married a corporal in the Army and the lady-who-took-a-man's-job gave the bride away.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Meatless Days Out In Federal Cafeterias

The one meatless day a week in Federal cafeterias will be dropped. At least one meat dish will be available at each meal. The Welfare and Recreational Association will provide Federal employes with as much meat, and perhaps a little more, as was served before rationing. The catch is — and there is a catch —that Federal workers will be served fewer fats and oils in the other foods they buy. For example, there will be fewer fritters, french-fried potatoes and any other dishes that require fats and oils. The association decided, after a survey, that the average employe preferred to get his ration points in meat rather than in vegetables and salads. Hence the new policy. When meat rationing was first announced it was feared that the cafeterias would be forced to have two meatless days a week. That fear has been wiped away for the time being at least.

Army Air Forces plans to move about 100 of its employes to Harrisburg, Pa. Several other minor moves also are in the wind at AAF . . . Attention, Costello Committee: The President's draft deferment committee is hearing appeals from four to five Federal workers each week who want to enter the military service and whose agencies refuse to release. Employes within draft age must get the approval of their agencies before they can enlist or accept a commission . . . Soil Conservation Service has promoted 149 employes who are in the armed service. When these employes return they'll go into better jobs at better salaries . . . Budget Bureau took a walloping before the Senate Appropriations Committee. It asked for a $300,000 increase and it was cut $205,000. Some employes will have to be dropped if the cut sticks.

A slambang defense of Robert Morss Lovett was made yesterday before the Senate Appropriations Committee by Interior Secretary Ickes. The House believes Lovett, secretary of the Virgin Islands, to be subversive and it has ordered him to be fired. Ickes described the House action as "reckless" and a "performance which this democracy cannot tolerate." And besides, he said, it's unconstitutional. The Senate committee is likely to uphold Ickes. . . . Representative Dirksen yesterday introduced a bill the objective of which the Administration has been playing with for years. He would set up an Office of Power Administration under which would be placed TVA, Federal Power, Reclamation, the power activities of WPB, SEC, Defense Plants, Interior Department and other loose ends. The Administration should have done something about the power mess long ago and now Dirksen, a potent Republican, may force it to act.

Possible Raise for Yates

An amendment to the independent office bill would give Jack Blandford, National Housing boss, the authority to merge various units in his housing agencies. . . . Another rider would raise the salary of efficient Frank Yates, Assistant Comptroller General, to $10,000. Yates recently was promoted to the No. 2 spot at GAO, but because of some mixup he was given a cut in salary. Five lesser officials at GAO are paid higher salaries. The rider will make amends. . . . Civil Service Commission has told agencies frankly not to appeal cases of their employes ordered transferred. Time taken for appeals is generally wasted. . . . The Census Editing Unit at Foreign Funds Control will work an extra hour on May 31 in memory of Federal employes who have been killed in the war.

The Board of Investigation and Research had its death sentence extended yesterday by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The agency was ordered to close up shop on June 30 but its studies aren't completed and the committee recommended it be given $350,000 to complete its work. The money would carry it through for another year. Opposition, however, may develop in the House . . . The President is forbidden from giving his National Resources Planning Board any additional funds in a Senate rider . . . Floods in the Midwest and South will make the East Coast gas drought more severe . . . Home Owners Loan Corp. is relieved from OPA's home-buying policies in a rider placed on the Independent Offices bill. OPA restrictions are said to have slowed up the sale of Government-owned homes.

Labor representatives are complaining to members of Congress that they have been refused an opportunity to testify before the Smith Committee that's currently taking OPA for a rough ride . . . The wife and daughter of OPA Administrator Prentiss Brown check up on ceiling prices at their neighborhood grocery . . . More than 100 Census Bureau employes at Suitland have victory gardens on Government property there . . . The Ramspeck Committee will meet today to again go into the number of employes cut off the rolls by the recent Budget Bureau orders . . . The Surgeon General's Office of the War Department will dance tonight at the Statler. More than 900 tickets have been sold.

'Soft' Policy On Venereal Disease Hit

Churchman Assails Hush-Hush Attitude; Police Scheduled To Attend Parley

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

The "hush-hush policy" of citizens toward venereal disease and other vice problems was scored yesterday by Wilbur J. LaRoe, jr., chairman of the Washington Federation of Churches' civic affairs committee.

LaRoe's statement came as he disclosed plans for a coming powwow of District police and court officials to "let their hair down" on the whole vice situation in the Nation's Capital.

A well-known attorney and churchman, LaRoe revealed that Maj. Edward Kelly, superintendent of police; Corporation Counsel Richmond Keech and other officials have been invited to the meeting, the time and place to be announced shortly.

Tendency to Soft Pedal

"An unfortunate feature of our whole attitude toward venereal disease is our tendency to soft-pedal our treatment of it," said LaRoe in an exclusive statement to The Post.

"We have pursued a hush-hush policy, apparently on the theory that the subject is not a nice one to talk about," he declared. "Now we see our military efforts injured by our own hesitation.

"It is time for the church people and other people to wake up and fight this evil with the same frankness and the same courage which we show in fighting tuberculosis and smallpox."

LaRoe lauded the House District subcommittee on public health, headed by Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat) of Maryland, for "bringing the subject out into the light of day where we can take a real crack at it."

Represents 175 Churches

The Federation of Churches is representative body of 175 local and nearby Protestant Churches, with a membership of more than 100,000.

LaRoe has long championed the use of more space in church buildings for social and recreational programs for youths, as a preventive measure for juvenile delinquency.

He told The Post that, in his opinion, the church, home and school have equal responsibility in preventing delinquency, and deplored the fact that there is so much "buck-passing" among those groups regarding the responsibility for character-building.

Ration Applications

District residents may send their applications for War Ration Book No. 3 to local boards immediately instead of waiting until June 1, date originally announced for acceptance of applications, OPA said yesterday. Processing of the books will begin at once. June 10 is the deadline for sending in applications, it was pointed out.

First Spring Dance

The first in a series of spring dances for the personnel of the office of the Surgeon General will be staged tonight at 8 p. m. in the Hotel Statler. A door prize of a $100 war bond will be presented by Gen. James C. Magee, surgeon general of the United States Army. Jack Morton's orchestra will play.

Too Much Bacteria

Advised by Judge Hobart Newman to "get out of business if you can't keep your utensils clean," Karl Richter, owner of a bar-restaurant at 3624 Georgia Avenue Northwest, was fined in Municipal Court yesterday for using drinking glasses that were improperly sterilized. Health Department inspectors testified that the bacteria count on the glasses was 8400.

Law to Force Retailers to Pay Cash for Liquor

A new set of liquor regulations adopted by the Commissioners yesterday will require retailers to pay cash for products bought from wholesale dealers. At present dealers are allowed until the fifteenth of the following month to settle accounts.

While the new rules differ little in other respects from the present regulations, one proposed major revision—the restriction of discounts from wholesalers to retailers—was indefinitely postponed because of the war. A proposed scale of legal discount was decided to be unworkable now because it would conflict with OPA policy.

Identification of the brand of beer sold on tap is required in the new rules to prevent bartenders from ringing in cheaper brands.

To check bootlegging, the Commissioners ordered that any retail customer buying more than 12 quarts of hard liquor or 48 quarts of beer must carry a bill of sale while transporting the liquor. This receipt must show the name and address of the vendor and the quantity and brands of liquor purchased.

If an applicant for a liquor license withdraws his petition, he may not re-file an application within a year, under the new order.

The new rules will go into effect five days after being advertised. The regulation for putting wholesaler-retailer transactions on a cash basis will go into effect 60 days after the other rulings become valid.

National Gallery Gets 63 Portraits From Mellon Trust

The National Gallery of Art yesterday announced acceptance of 63 American portraits from A. W. Mellon Educational and Charitable Trust, together with eight paintings from Chester Dale's collection and two portraits from Clarence Van Dyke Tier's.

Included in the Mellon organization gift are 19 paintings by Gilbert Stuart, with the aid of which the Gallery will be able to exhibit comprehensively the growth of that artist. Other artists represented in the collection, which covers some 150 years of American painting, are Robert Feke, Copley, Sully, John Quidor, Ralph Earl, Vanderlyn, Eichholtz, Healy, Rembrandt Peale, Jarvis, Lambdin and Emanuel Leutze.

Unexplored Talent Brought to Light At Show Here

The best of the 400 civilian War Department amateurs who wanted to be on Major Bowes' radio program, performed for him and the Nation last night at Constitution Hall.

They were the eight finalists, chosen last week at the Departmental Auditorium to sing, dance, whistle, imitate and caricature or get the gong.

None got the gong.

Instead, Frances Yoder, 18, brought down a well-filled house with an accomplished tap dance after explaining that she lived in Berwyn, Md., worked at Gravelly Point, spent two hours traveling each way and felt like Jimmie Doolittle every day. She said she could ballroom dance, too, and was an Army hostess every week at Beltsville, Md., where she was chosen sweetheart recently, but around her neck she wore a signet ring from another Army man—the one that counts.

Jack Buchanan, former editorial cartoonist and presently heraldic artist in the military planning division of the Quartermaster General's Office, where he designs and creates flags, medals, badges, insignia and uniform ornamentation, sang the "Big Bas Viol." A new war worker, he hails from Austin, Tex.

Saxaphone imitations were given by Jim Cable of the "great State of Pennsylvania," "Somerset County," "well, Berlin, Pa., to be exact." Cable said he worked at Headquarters of Army Air Forces. After that he imitated a rooster, a hen, an auto, a laugh, and did a solo of "Shortnin' Bread."

Agnes DeAngelis, whose brother, Lieut. John DeAngelis was one of the crew in the Rickenbacker saga, went on a rug cutters' rampage with gestures, to sing, "Murder, He Sez!" She came from Nesquehoning, Pa., to become a typist in the Quartermaster General's office.

"Stardust" was whistled by Mary Margaret McCusker, secretary in the same office, who came to Washington from Fort Sam Houston last November. James Foster, civilian personnel division, AAF, sang "Tramps at Sea."

Bill Coleman, who practices on his 3-year-old son, Billy, gave the audience nursery rhymes. "If, after all, Peter Piper was pickled," he Kaltenborned, "that is quite another thing." But as far as "Ladybug, yes, yes," was concerned, it was W. C. Fields saying, "Take it on the lam, my diminutive little chum scram, little ladybug scram." Coleman and his wife are doing graduate work together at Catholic University. He is employed in the radio branch of the War Department.

The Terrell Allan Choir of 14 colored voices concluded the program with a spiritual, "Good News." During the evening the major paid tribute to the 1,375,000 civilian employes in Federal service who buy enough war bonds to buy 74 Flying Fortresses a month.

Trolley Injures Woman; Cyclist Hurt in Accident

Struck by a street car at Seventh and F Streets Northwest, Miss Sally R. King, 25, of 605 Tuckerman Street Northwest, suffered a possible fractured cervical vertebrae. She was treated at Doctors' Hospital and later transferred to Casualty. Police say the street car operator was Lawrence Matheson, 25, of 1342 Levis Street Northeast.

Earlier, Frank Keeley, jr., 24, of 3413 Q Street Northwest, was injured when the motorcycle on which he was riding skidded and pinned him to the ground at Eleventh Street and Potomac Avenue Southeast. He was treated at Casualty for a fractured leg and head injuries.

Tuberculosis Group Sets Meeting Date

The annual meeting of the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association, postponed over the protests of a large group of members, will be held Tuesday, June 8, in Room D of the Jewish Community Center at 8 p. m. The Post learned last night.

Meanwhile, there is evidence that the association is mollifying dissenting members in an attempt to bring peace within the organization, whose affairs were aired recently before the House District Committee.

A spokesman for the association revealed that two members of the dissenters' group, which held a "rump parliament" April 27 when the promised annual meeting was suddenly called off, have been appointed to the committee to nominate members of a new board of directors.

That committee will meet next Tuesday night at 8 o'clock and the names of the candidates will be sent to the membership by June 1, spokesmen said. Presentation of the names of prospective board members to the association in advance of the annual meeting was one of the demands voiced by the rump parliament.

The executive committee of the association will meet next Wednesday night at 8 o'clock to consider appointment of a new secretary to replace Harald H. Lund, former executive secretary, whose resignation led to numerous public charges and countercharges.

Speakers at the annual meeting will be Dr. J. Arthur Myers, tuberculosis expert, and Dr. Kendall Emerson, managing director of the National Tuberculosis Association.

D. C. Army, Navy Nurse Quota Falls Far Short

The District has filled only 60 per cent of its quota of 38 Army and Navy nurses per month, Miss Gertrude Banfield, assistant director of Red Cross nursing, told 50 representatives of local health organizations and hospital boards at a meeting yesterday at the District Medical Auditorium at 1718 M Street Northwest.

SISTER OLIVIA

Sister M. Olivia Gowan, chairman of the District Red Cross nurse recruitment committee and dean of the school of nursing education of Catholic University, presided over the meeting.

Miss Banfield pointed out that in comparison with World War I the armed forces have twice as many men, five times as many military posts outside the territorial limits of the United States and six times as many posts outside the country. Yet, she said, the reservoir of nurses has not increased proportionately.

"Judging from the preliminary report of a national survey of nurses recently conducted by the American Red Cross, there is no need for alarm regarding the shortage of nurses on the home front," she said. "We have our neighbors, our nurses aides, our women trained in home nursing, and the visiting nurses to help alleviate the sportage, so that health conditions are incomparably better than they were during World War I."

3 District Bills Voted By Senate

Women's Work Hours, Paving, Compensation Measures Passed

Bills reducing contributions by employers for unemployment compensation, permitting longer hours for women in industry here, and reducing the cost of street paving to property owners here were passed unanimously by the Senate yesterday.

The so-called curbs and gutters bill, which was reported by the Senate District Committee as it passed the House, will become law when signed by the President. Under the bill householders are assessed only for curbs and gutters in front of their property, and the total cost of the street is borne by the District out of gasoline taxes. Formerly property owners paid half the cost of street paving.

Because of amendments by the Senate the other two bills will go to conference.

The unemployment compensation bill, passed as an amendment to the present act, puts a premium on stable employment. It establishes a sliding scale from a maximum of 2.7 per cent of the payroll, the present rate, to a minimum of one-tenth of 1 per cent for those employers whose labor turnover is lowest.

The bill increases benefits to those becoming unemployed from $18 for 19 weeks to $20 for 20 weeks, and adds a dependency clause to extend to the spouse or dependent child of an unemployed person.

The bill was presented because the District unemployment fund now has a reserve of more than 35 million dollars.

The work-hour bill, increasing the hours women may be employed in service industries to 54 a week, was amended by the Senate to retain the six-day work week. As passed by the House, employers would have been able to have a seven-day week. The District Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board is given authority to issue permits increasing working hours to employers who establish that such increase is essential to the war effort.

USO Qualifies 300 Women As Hostesses

A total of 300 Washington women received certificates qualifying them to serve as junior and senior USO hostesses last night in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, 1736 G Street Northwest.

MISS WILSON

Guest speaker was Miss Eleanor Wilson, woman's activities director of Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. and organizer of the Girls' Service Organization.

Since Miss Wilson organized the GSO last year, it has gained a membership of 85,000 young women between 18 and 30 who serve as social partners for servicemen at USO clubs.

Another course for USO hostesses will open next month for a large enrollment of new applicants under Mrs. Janet M. King, chairman of the courses, and Miss Jo Webb, chairman of senior hostesses.

In other USO events this weekend, the new Northeast club will be dedicated at 7:30 p. m. Sunday in the Northeast branch of the District Public Library at Seventh and Maryland Avenue Northeast. The dedication will be broadcast to USO clubs in cooperating churches in this area.

A dance also will be held tonight at Ingram Memorial Copgregation Church at Tenth and Massachusetts Avenue Northeast. Warworkers who wish to attend the dance and other USO programs under leadership of Mrs. Katherine Pell, Y. W. C. A.-USO director in charge, may register with her from 7 to 10 p. m. tonight at the Ingram Church. Dancing will be from 9 p. m. until midnight.

Miss Frances Conlon, U. S. O. director of church clubs operated by the National Catholic Community Service, has arranged a dance for servicemen and warworkers tomorrow night from 9 until midnight at the new clubhouse at St. Martin's Church parish house, 1912 North Capitol Street. There will be refreshments, a seven-piece orchestra, and amateur entertainment by some of the junior hostesses.

Trade Board To Plan for Postwar Era

Robinson Named Chairman of Group; Gude Stresses Aim Of Free Enterprise

A Postwar Planning Committee will be established here soon, in anticipation of abnormal conditions resulting from the war, Granville Gude, president of the Washington Board of Trade announced yesterday.

Gude named Charles A. Robinson, vice president and general manager of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., chairman of the committee. Other members of the committee will be appointed in about a month and will represent all fields of activity and business in the city.

At the same time, Gude announced the board's standing and special committee chairmen for 1943-44 in addition to chairmen of the sectional division, under which all committees function.

Importance of Plan

Gude, who proposed establishment of the postwar committee which was adopted by the board of trustees, said yesterday that postwar planning "is recognized as a forceful and positive means of maintaining our system of free enterprise—of keeping private industry free of too many governmental regulations after the peace" and warned "that if businessmen do not keep a firm hold on the reins of industry the Government may have to do it."

Washington is more susceptible to such control than most cities, he said, as it is run under close Federal control.

The committee will consider unemployment, parking and traffic, early removal of "temporary" buildings, slum clearance, education, public parks, health and protective service departments and the many other services and facilities which the city will need when peace comes, according to Gude.

More than 1200 business firms already have been mailed questionnaires on postwar problems and replies will be turned over to the new committee for information and guidance, it was said.

In addition, other committees of the Board of Trade will advise and cooperate with the postwar planning committee.

E. Barrett Prettyman was named chairman of the executive committee.

Other Committees

Other chairmen of sections and committees named were: C. Hayward Marshall, membership section chairman; Clarence W. Gonnell, membership; DeVere R. Weedon, Shabake; Claude W. Owen, taxation and legislation section chairman; L. H. Parker, municipal finance; Joseph C. McGarraghy, law and legislation and war adjustments; F. G. Addison, jr., employment and security.

Alfred G. Neal, municipal affairs section chairman; George E. Keneipp, public schools; B. M. McKelway, public library; Dr. R. L. Sexton, public health; Odell S. Smith, public order; John P. McDonald, parks and recreation; J. Austin Latimer, charities and corrections; John A. Reilly, construction and housing section chairman; Harvey L. Jones, public and private buildings; Harry Blake, zoning.

Arthur B. Heaton, architecture and architectural awards; Frank Van Sant, sanitation; H. L. Rust, jr., transportation section chairman; John A. Remon, river and harbor; Everett C. Crites, highways; P. V. K. Howard, traffic; William P. MacCracken, jr., aviation; Edward F. Lacey, public utilities and transportation; Frederick P. H. Siddons, community affairs section chairman.

Theodore W. Noyes, national representation; John C. Post, American ideals; Col. E. Goring Bliss, military and naval affairs; Francis P. Sullivan, cultural development; James E. Colliflower, business development section chairman; E. D. Detwiler, insurance committee.

John J. Hasley, civilian defense; Bruce R. Allen, industrial and commercial interests; Edgar Morris, convention, tourist and community promotion section chairman; B. M. McKelway, research, statistical and publications section chairman, and Harry L. Merrick, publicity section chairman.

MacLachlen Feted

Lanier P. MacLachlen, retiring president of the Board of Trade was honored last night by 45 officers and directors of the board who held a testimonial dinner for him at the Mayflower Hotel. Commissioners John Russell Young and Guy Mason also were present.

As record of the occasion, Granville Gude, this year's president of the Board of Trade, presented MacLachlen with a certificate of tribute signed by officers and directors. The certificate acknowledged MacLachlen's "able leadership . . . during the eventful year May 1, 1942, to April 30, 1943."

Educational Leaders in Session To Study Plan of World Culture

With the thesis that international education is a vital phase of postwar planning, delegates from 25 national educational organizations yesterday opened a three-day conference here to formulate a representative policy for this country's participation in world-wide cooperation in education.

The group, organized here in February as the Liaison Committee for International Education, with representatives from major organizations in the field, to build a coordinated understanding of the various world cultures. Decisions will be reported to organizations represented for consideration and future action, Chairman Grayson N. Kefauver, dean of Stanford University School of Education, said.

The opening session yesterday morning was devoted to discussion of work in international cooperation in the past and policies recently developed in Europe to advance educational practices. Leaders were I. L. Kandel, George F. Zook and I. James Quillen. In the afternoon, international cooperation in other fields such as health and labor was probed as indicative of what may be accomplished by concerted action.

In order to determine their particular role in peacetime planning, the committee last night heard Senator Ball report on recent developments in postwar planning organization. Egon Ronshofen-Wertheimer, professor of international affairs at American University, discussed the organization of the League of Nations.

At closed sessions today participants will present proposals for international cooperation in education and a world-wide organization to carry out the plan.

Memo To— Miss Brown

Decoration, Free Style

You've been neglecting the forgotten wonders of the grocery store basement, I'll bet, since you've been in Washington. Or perhaps you never have looked behind the counter. If you do, with spring room-prettying in your mind's eye, you should see some inspiring things.

Orange crates, for example, are structures of many and varied uses. Most grocers will contribute them, gratis, with no ration points attached. One of the trickiest things you can construct out of these essentially sound boxes is a dressing table. Sounds a little fantastic, but it really works. Two crates, painted with a coat of flat and a coat of enamel, and with a healthy board nailed across the top, will be a handsome dressing table with two fine shelves for paint and powder. Thumb-tack a swatch of cheap percale (with a reap-pleat here and there) around the whole thing and you'll have a pretty fine piece of furniture. Put it smack in front of a window, add a stand-on-its-own-power mirror and you'll have the advantage of daylight right on your shiny proboscis.

Another necessary (I hope) piece which the average furnished room does not contain is a bookshelf. Here the orange crate really comes into its own. One (with a partition down the middle) can be placed on end and painted, thus providing space for 15 or 16 books. Two crates, one atop the other, result in a more spacious bookcase.

One crate, painted, with or without a skirt, will end up a handy bedside or chairside table with a shelf for alarm clock, handkerchief, water pitcher or whatever.

In selecting crates (and since they're free we may as well be particular) it's better to hold out for a good strong one than to accept with pleasure the first thing that comes along. Many companies pack their oranges in boxes worthy of Georg Jensen, so don't waste your time and talent on anything less.

Barrels also have multitudinous uses. Small ones, especially, are lots of fun and very much easier to snag from the grocer. One of the most attractive occasional chairs imaginable can be made from a small barrel, with a cushion fitting the top, a back made of old yardsticks or just about anything, and the ever-present "skirt." Better cut a few inches from the bottom, though, so your guest's feet may touch the ground.

Backless barrels make attractive stools—and these can be as high or low as your imagination can stretch.

It isn't difficult to whip up a footstool out of practically any wooden box the grocer has to offer. Even the scantiest covering of cloth will transform nothing into something.

You can paint up flower boxes, what-nots and all sorts of small items with just a few old wooden cartons to start with. Certain boxes suggest certain things, so let your sudden inspirations guide you.

By the way, you can use the sewing machines at the Y. W. C. A. for 15 cents an hour in case you're too lazy or too particular to do your stitching by hand.

Why not dress up your surroundings, now that Easter's over and you've finished dressing up yourself? The former can be done much more cheaply!

Six Months After Marriage, Couple Were Divorced, Because Husband Disliked Responsibility; Now He Wants to Be Married Again; Girl Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Four years ago I married a man whom I loved very much and always will, I believe. We hadn't known each other very long, but it was love at first sight on my part and I felt sure he would be the "one-and-only" man in my life. However, I began to realize shortly after marriage that he never would be happy in marriage, as he couldn't stand to be tied down and have to meet the responsibilities that go with marriage.

We were both very young. I was 18 and he was 20. But I was old for my age and determined to leave nothing undone which might make the marriage a success. However, after six months I knew there wasn't a chance, so I obtained an uncontested divorce. After that he moved out of town and I took a business course and got a very good job, because I firmly intended to "amount to something." As time passed I dated many men and had several offers of marriage from men who would have been loyal and trustworthy, but I couldn't accept any, for I knew I was still in love with my former husband, although I expected to forget him eventually.

After four years' separation we met accidentally a short time ago and spent a few hours together. I now find that I am more in love with him than ever, and he says he feels the same about me. He wants us to be married again. However, I am still afraid he is not ready to settle down yet, although he says he is. But I very much want to marry him, as nothing in life seems to matter so much as being with him. He is in the armed forces and stationed close by. Whether to go on without him, or whether to marry him and have some happy times, along with the unhappy ones, is a problem I wish you would help me solve.

B. T.

Needs to Understand Why Marriage Failed

DEAR B. T.: If you were able to objectively evaluate the nature of your "love" for your former husband, and his for you, I imagine you would discover that it amounts to a powerful physical attraction which tends to blind both of you to the fact that mentally and socially you have little, if anything, in common—so that it is practically impossible for you to pull together in double harness, with any degree of harmony or success. I daresay you are so different from each other that actually you are "allergic" to each other's views and temperament, when you can see each other through calmly dispassionate eyes.

In the brief six months it took to prove that your marriage simply wouldn't work, as a long haul social contract, you were able to mutually arrive at that doleful conclusion for the reason that, in the arrangement, you had opportunity to burn away, as it were, for the time being, much of the plain sex magnetism that had prompted the union—so that the essential fact of your incompatibility of character stood forth clearly, when you turned aside from lovemaking to consider, with a cool head, what you had of common interests, similar objectives, complementary qualities, etc., to build on. It appears that you began to realize, almost immediately, that your husband's short-sighted principal purpose in getting married was simply to possess you physically, and that as soon as he had attained that limited objective, he lapsed into the disturbing conviction that marriage is a "trap"—with sex-appeal as the bait—and that he never could be "easy" again unless and until you had set him free.

Man Isn't Entitled To Respect and Trust

With remarkable gallantry for a girl of 18, you took this painful discovery in stride and determined, even so, to try to preserve the relationship and make it a success—by exerting every ounce of your intelligence and ingenuity to try to demonstrate to him that responsibilities may be happily carried if one is maturely disposed to accept them as a potentially rewarding part of living. But after six months—so you report—you "knew there wasn't a chance" of saving the situation, which can only mean that he had consistently refused to support your high-hearted efforts to make the marriage a real partnership. Whereupon you bowed to the inevitable and set him free, thus sparing yourself the embarrassing denouement of having him "walk out on you," as doubtless he would have done sooner or later, if you had tried desperately to hang on to him indefinitely.

Now, after four years' separation, during which time you have been (a) burning incense to him in your heart, and (b) living an emotionally repressed existence, you meet him again, to experience once more that treacherous excitement of feeling which paved the way to your first ill-starred trip to the altar with him. And on the basis of that breathless emotional tumult, which no other man so far has been able to evoke in like measure, you are half-thinking of going back to repeat your former mistake. My advice is—Don't do it. Remember that heart-lifting love is based on well-deserved respect and justified trust—neither of which you can rightly repose in this man. And that a first requisite of happy and successful marriage is the thorough willingness of each partner to protectively invest his every resource in the relationship—particularly when it seems in most danger of destruction, by friction within or temptation beckoning from the outside. Your previous experience with your former husband proved him totally lacking in this disposition, and there is nothing in his subsequent record, so far as we know, to indicate that he has since acquired it.

He May Be Magnetic, But He's Second Rate

It has been said, "A wise man learns from experience, a fool never does." Experience has taught you that this lad is emotionally unstable and socially irresponsible, and also that love of the kind you feel for each other—and never more strongly than now—is of itself totally inadequate to sustain a marriage. So the wise thing to do is to accept that lesson, painful though its implications may be—and (as you say) "go on without him," if you hope to find safe harbor when next you venture matrimony. And hereafter, by the way, give yourself a break in the game of hearts by judging your serious suitors in terms of character, and not in irrelevant, self-defeating comparison to this curiously magnetic but basically second-rate chap.

Know Before You Tinker

The fixer-upper around the house who worked with a bent hairpin or a nail file is an ante-bellum curiosity these days. For if now-precious household appliances are going to see you through until peace comes, you must know your stuff before you start to tinker with unreplaceable home conveniences. And the word for the wise is, "When in doubt, don't."

New Food Patterns

Now that we can't get every kind of food, we have to find new food patterns and make our old ones more flexible. We should not depend too much on appetite in meal planning, because the foods you prefer may not balance the menu. The greater the variety of food in the day's menu, the better the chance of a balanced diet and good health.

Methods of Measuring To Find Malnutrition

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Do you know whether you are getting enough food?

Since we have been warned that this country is facing a serious food shortage, since my colleagues and I are already beginning to see in dispensary clinics examples of rickets and scurvy such as we have not seen for 30 years (at least in this corn-fed section of the country), it may be well for every citizen to be alert to the signs which may indicate that he is not getting enough food, or not enough of the right kinds of food.

Malnutrition often comes on so subtly that you are not aware of its encroachments. Weight change is not a criterion, as we shall explain below. Under conditions of food shortage a fellow may want to fill himself up and feel reasonably comfortable, so he eats the most concentrated, the richest foods he can find, and looks fat and plump, but really is in a state of hidden malnutrition.

I have said for years that the statements emanating from high authorities, that one-third of the American people were suffering from vitamin deficiency and malnutrition, were absurdly exaggerated, sensational and alarmist in character. But that was at a time of food abundance in the land. I am well aware that in a country where food is so scare it must be rationed, the vitamin deficiency diseases appear and develop by leaps and bounds.

That was abundantly proved by the widespread malnutrition in the populations of Germany and Austria after World War I. (In other countries too, of course, but we have the detailed medical reports of the American War Relief Commission and Quakers on the conditions in Germany and Austria.)

One would think that weight would be an infallible criterion. But by the ordinary standard tables a child or an adult may be considerably underweight and yet be in splendid nutrition, and conversely the overweight, with all his fat, actually undernourished. A better method is the so-called grid technique (published in this column Nov. 25, 1942) which gives a long-range picture of growth and weight changes.

Growth and weight in children, however, even though not infallible, are valuable indices, and a record of your children's weight and height each week

Women's Club News

By Genevieve Reynolds

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Bound to be a lively session is the Voteless District of Columbia League of Women Voters' annual meeting, Tuesday, May 25, 10 a. m., in Palisades Park. Proposed changes in the by-laws will be considered along with other debatable points such as: Should officers be continued to be nominated and elected by a committee or a ballot? Also, Should an officer succeed herself?

Registration begins at 10 a. m., with reports and business taking over the morning session. You can have lunch if you take your own. In the afternoon, there will be reports of neighborhood groups, presentation of proposed programs, indorsement of national and local programs and indorsement of legislation.

Decisions made at this meeting will determine the future of the league, according to Mrs. Eugene Callaghan. Youthful Mrs. Duffield, league member since 1933, has been named president to succeed Mrs. Callaghan. She has served in various capacities, such as director, chairman of finance, contributions, program, and now is chairman of suffrage.

Other officers named include Mrs. Francis M. Walters, jr., second vice president; Mrs. Hallan Huffman, treasurer. The two directors are Mrs. Max O. Lorenz and Mrs. Wiley Rutledge.

In addition to active participation in the league's activities, all the newly named officers practically single-handed operate homes, give time to the A. W. V. S., Red Cross, Consumer Committee of OCD, the Civilian Interview Committee for WAAC enlistments.

Did You Know That . . .?

Hundreds of exquisite dolls from all over the world will be exhibited by members of the Dollology Club of Washington at the United Nations Doll Festival tomorrow afternoon, 1 to 6 o'clock in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel. The exhibition is for the benefit of Good Will Industries, and Mrs. William O. Douglas, president of the organization, has been working day and night with a committee of prominent women to make the event successful.

This exhibition isn't just an ordinary collection of dolls that you can see anywhere. Truth is, they have been collected by experts who know their history and background. Throughout the afternoon, there will be Venezuelan dance numbers, native, folk and ballet. Children of the diplomatic corps will appear in native costumes. And at 4 p. m. a local store will present a fashion show with debutantes and young senoritas from the various embassies as models.

But more about the dolls—you will see some made of bread crumbs, apples, fur, ivory, cork, exquisite china, porcelain. There is even a microscopic doll made of a small bug, a flea doll of Mexico, 500 years old, fully clothed which can be discerned only under a magnifying glass. By the way, Mrs. Kathryn Rodgers is president of the Dollology Club, Mrs. Barnet Nover is chairman of the United Nations Doll Festival.

Dozens of women's clubs as well as the Campfire Girls, Girl Scouts and Girl Reserves are cooperating with the committee in the event.

Should you be interested in meeting newsmaking names, there will be plenty around, including Mrs. Jesse Jones, wife of the Secretary of Commerce; Mrs. Francis Biddle, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. Claude Wickard, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs. Frank Walker, wife of the Postmaster General. Then there are to be representatives of the glamorous diplomatic contingent.

Drink Enough Milk?

How much milk do you order each day? Enough to provide every grown-up with two glasses, and each child with three to four glasses? The average diet is low in calcium and milk and cheese are the chief sources of this important mineral. Milk contributes so much nutritionally that you should never cut down on your milk bill in order to splurge on some fancy food or tasty dessert.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Mrs. A. E. R.: There is no particular age at which you can expect a child to have completed both bowel and bladder control. You might expect a child of 22 months would wait for your attentions, having come to anticipate them.

The burden of keeping him dry and clean would still be yours, but once this pleasant estate becomes habitual and the child learns to recognize the signs of his need for attention, he will begin to resent being taken to the toilet.

Then you can allow him to wait until he signifies his need. All children eventually accept this obligation, especially if a parent has never done anything to make going to the toilet disagreeable. If we connect toilet duties with pain or ridicule or humiliation we make the task of control the more difficult. If we accept our own job patiently, all children inevitably become trained and controlled.

Mrs. F. M.: When a 3-month-old baby persistently refuses food, though apparently hungry, you could surmise that the food may be distasteful to her. However good the formula seems to be, it would seem wise to make some change in it to determine if this might be true.

It is possible the holes in the nipple are so small the child makes an effort to eat and then turns away, being exhausted or baffled by the attempt to pull the milk through it. Tip up the bottle and note if the milk drops rapidly. If not, burn a larger hole in the nipple with a red-hot needle.

The baby's mouth should be examined to be sure there are no spots or sores in the mouth which would make nursing the nipple so painful that the child would refuse.

It is possible the type of nipple is badly shaped for this child—too long, perhaps, so the child is choked. It is wise to be very critical of all the equipment, as well as the formula and baby's own physical condition.

But, to be more specific, I would have to know the baby's age, weight, method of feeding, hours of feeding and formula. The above is merely guessing.

Mrs. W. J. G.: According to the current Journal of Pediatrics, there has been some work done on protecting a child from rickets by means of "massive" doses of Vitamin D given once or twice during the first year. I do not know of any doctor who is doing this in general practice. No doubt, if the research is continuously favorable, there will be many. I agree it is a most interesting idea.

Our leaflet, "Types of Stools," which offers information on training for cleanly habits, may be had by sending a 3-cent-stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred, in care of The Washington Post.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

When it comes to hip slimming, it's the angle that counts, as Judy Blake, N. B. C. actress, shows you. In kicking backward, swing leg as far back as possible, knee straight and hip muscles doing the work. The same applies to the sideward swing, right. Left: Shuttle legs back and forth from hips in wide range.

You can take off 10 pounds without slimming your hips enough to notice. But, with exercise, you can slim down through the hips without losing an ounce of weight.

This does not mean that exercise is reducing in spots. It isn't. But the effect is the same, for flabby tissue is bulky and well-toned muscles compact, and exercise tones the muscles and makes the measurements trimmer.

You have to get the right angle to your exercise. Stretching and bending down don't do a thing for the hips—they are for the waistline. Walking is excellent general exercise, but it won't reduce your hips unless it is uphill.

The technique is to swing the leg from the hip, whether from an upright or a prone position. If you are on your feet all day, however, it is a good idea to take part of your exercises lying down. This cuts down the physiological cost and reduces the margin for error because you can forget about your posture. Here is an easy but effective hip slimmer

Position: Lying face downward on floor, head resting on the folded arms, legs straight down.

Movement: Raise alternate legs high up in back, hold, lower. Repeat 12 times. Then shake legs loosely to free the muscles from tension.

Roll over on your back for the next one.

Position: Lying on back on floor, swing both legs straight up in air to right angle with the trunk.

Movement: Keep that position and roll over on one side, back across the hips and away over on other side. Roll for 30 counts.

If you sit at your job, your exercises should include a few circulation joggers. This exercise for hips and thighs is an excellent workout.

Position: Stand erect with hands on hips.

Movement: Kick leg directly sideward. Rest foot on floor and kick other leg straight out to side. When you get good at this, give a little hop on one foot as you kick other leg out to side.

Position: Standing erect with arms hanging at sides.

Movement: Same as in preceding exercise except that you fling arms out to one side as you swing opposite leg to other side. Keep swinging and flinging for 20 counts.

Position: Same as just before.

Movement: Swing one leg up and back as you fling the arm on that side up and back, other arm up in front. Come back to position and repeat for 20 counts. Rest and perform on other side.

Finish with this hip trimmer:

Position: Hips and legs in air overhead, hands supporting hips with weight on arms and shoulders.

Movement: Shuttle legs back and forth from hips in wide swings. Repeat 10 times. Rest. Later, work up to another 10 swings.

Wear and Tear

The former handy-woman, who often did lots of harm for the professional to repair later, is learning a thing or two about preserving the efficiency of equipment and protecting the house against unnecessary wear and tear. There was a day, of course, when you lived in a roseate glow of fair-weather psychology. It wasn't that you exactly meant to shorten the life of your gadgets, it was just that you knew if things went too wrong you could hie yourself out to the store and get a new one. Actually you were doing even the manufacturers a disservice by your seemingly wanton lack of caretaking, for most refrigerators, irons, stoves and other appliances are built to last much longer than the every-year-a-new-model propaganda might lead to believe.

'Mrs. Barnes Goes to Washington,' Propelled by Gretchen Finletter's Discerning Pen; What Does She Find? Friends Back Home Will Never Know—For Sure

"Mrs. Barnes had been invited to Washington for a party."

That might start almost anything, but it happens to be the beginning of Gretchen Finletter's engaging story, "Mrs. Barnes Goes To Washington," published in the current issue of a national magazine.

To read it is to love it, particularly if you have been around here long enough to be inured to out-of-towners who trip in blithely for brief visits and expect to "know wartime Washington" after one cocktail party.

The piece is fiction—says Mrs. Finletter; but she certainly can't claim that any similarity to persons living or dead is purely coincidental. Mrs. Barnes has a prototype in just about every block of every town in America. Her one weakness of "allowing her mind to leap far and imaginatively into the future" is one with which many of us have coped, time after time. Like my Aunt Minnie from Texas, who used to come to Washington every season "just so as to meet the people who run the country," Mrs. Barnes liked to impress her friends, and, Alice-wise, she indulged in "a curious form of understatement which hinted at some much larger and more glamorous fact."

"Just a Little Diplomatic Party"

Knowing a thousand Mrs. Barneses all over America, I wasn't surprised to find that Gretchen Finletter's particular one confided to her closest friend that she was running down to Washington for a little diplomatic party and ended up by tossing in a few flossy references to the British Embassy and a charge d'affaires of something or other. And she wasn't too much perturbed when said friend signed her on the dotted line for a luncheon as soon as she returned ("Then you can tell us everything—promise?") She promised, of course. She always would.

Well, whether you know your Capital City—or just think you do—you can guess what happened from then on out. Mrs. Barnes did go to the party, and she did try to look intelligent and interested and to join in the conversation. She heard one man opine, "The OSS is going to swallow up the OWI."

That she met nobody more distinguished than "Donald Nelson's new righthand man" is not important. She did have a chance to talk to a United States Army captain (as who doesn't) and she exchanged a greeting with at least one foreigner who may, or may not, have been a diplomat's wife. Furthermore, she held her own in such rounds of persiflage as the following excerpt indicates:

"'Oh,' said Mrs. Barnes. She looked hopefully at the officer. 'This is all so exciting and interesting. I haven't been in Washington long.'"

"'Nobody has,' answered the captain."

"'Captain,' began Mrs. Barnes, 'I suppose in the War Department all you are thinking about is North Africa.'"

"'All I'm thinking about,' said the captain, 'is how to get from here to Kalorama Road for dinner.'"

Of course Mrs. Barnes finally got back home, and she went to the luncheon, and she managed to report that "some of the Cabinet . . ."

Finds Washington an Elusive Scene

You can go on from there with Mrs. Barnes. Having met her type a thousand times, I'm a little tired of us. I'd much rather talk about Mrs. Finletter, one of "the four dynamic Damrosch girls."

The wife of a State Department official, Mrs. Finletter has turned out a series of amusing narratives ever since she and her husband moved here a couple of years ago. Most of her pieces have been in the Junior Miss line. This is the first I have seen in a Capital setting.

"I find Washington a very elusive scene to try and catch," Mrs. Finletter told me yesterday. "It seems to change, to flow together, before the story is half done."

It does, of course, because one person's Washington is not another's . . . and because the Nation's Capital when portrayed through the eyes of a casual visitor—a Mrs. Barnes—ceases to be a city at all; becomes a state of mind, a changing one at that.

The former Gretchen Damrosch, daughter of Walter Damrosch, the noted conductor, Mrs. Finletter said that she had "been writing, off and on, for a number of years." She finds that writing in Washington is particularly difficult because "there's so much else to do, and everything seems to float and converge." Besides, there's the business of running her Georgetown house, looking after her two daughters, and working at the Red Cross. Like the three other Damrosch girls, she's one to keep busy every minute.

Each of the four is contributing to the war effort. One sister, Mrs. Herman Kiaer, interviews prospective WAACS at the recruiting center here. The other two, Mrs. Sidney Howard and Mrs. Robert Littell, are running a dairy farm in Massachusetts.

Sister Kenny Is Grateful For U. S. Aid to Australia

Noted Nurse Considers Her Treatment Discovery As Small Token of Thanks to America

By Martha Rhyne

"So you see the value of my gift to the United States of America, a gift I am very proud to have given is small return for what America has done for Australia. Deep in my heart and in the heart of every Australian, there is a sense of gratitude to your Commander in Chief and the American people that time can never erase."

Thus spoke Sister Elizabeth Kenny of her revolutionary treatment of infantile paralysis, which has won the recognition and respect of the world's foremost medical authorities. In Washington to transact personal business with the Australian Legation, the Australian nurse spoke in slow, deliberate phrases of her great work.

SISTER ELIZABETH KENNY

Recoveries Near Ninety Per Cent

Under the supervision of Minneapolis, Minn. medical authorities, Sister Kenny has reduced the crippling effects of infantile paralysis from 80 per cent to 15 or 20 per cent. "As a matter of fact, the percentage of normal recoveries at the Elizabeth Kenny Institute in Minneapolis has been almost 90 per cent," she said.

Sister Kenny continued, "At all centers that I visit where my work has been introduced, doctors are enthusiastic over results. According to records of research workers, the official percentage of recoveries in cases treated by the old method is 15 per cent."

One could not mistake her profession. Her large and capable physical structure, her strong, sure hands, and her deep-set eyes reflect the understanding and compassion she has for the pain and suffering she has seen.

Three years ago, at the urgent request of a committee of medical men in Australia, Sister Kenny came here to present her work to research institutions. The pride which she has in her work stems from the fight she made for the chance to prove her theory and the skepticism and opposition she overcame.

In her quiet, deep voice, with the slightest trace of Australian accent, she told of the beginning of her research, 33 years ago, in the lonely bushlands of Australia. There she was left alone and unassisted to observe the symptoms of the terrible disease and to effect a treatment.

"It was here," she said, "that I learned that the symptoms of infantile paralysis were just the opposite of what the world thought they were. Instead of paralysis, I found the muscles affected in great pain and spasm. Through the pain and shortening of these muscles, the opposing muscles were affected and could not function. Eventually they are paralyzed from disuse. That was just the opposite of the medical theory accepted throughout the world and, as many medical authorities have later expressed it, I presented to the world a new concept and a satisfactory treatment for a new disease."

Sister Kenny, whose title is one given to nurses in Australia, had difficulty in gaining a receptive audience after she came to the United States. With the assistance of Dr. Melvin Henderson of the Mayo Clinic, an interview was arranged with some medical men in Minneapolis and St. Paul to whom she presented her theory. With three renowned physicians, she made rounds in the hospital. Cases were selected and she pointed out certain deformities which could, in part, be restored to function. These cases had not responded after several months of the old treatment. She corrected the deformities and restored function to certain muscles within a week. Arrangements were made with the Public Welfare Board of Minneapolis for her to demonstrate her work.

The research laboratory at Rochester, N. Y., immediately undertook to disprove Sister Kenny's theory. Instead of disproving it, they proved it to be correct. The university later honored her with the degree of doctor of science. The professor of physical therapy and noted surgeons in Minneapolis at first thought she was unbalanced. Now they are her most ardent supporters.

Discovery Made In Bushlands

Since coming to America she has trained doctors, nurses and technicians from 44 of the 48 States and Cuba, Canada and some South American countries. Her highly advanced method of physical therapy is also being used to treat war wounds, and with outstanding success.

"I did not know 33 years ago, in the isolated cabin home of an Irish emigrant in the Australian bushlands, that a great medical discovery had been made, a discovery which would eventually bring happiness and security to many hundreds and thousands of children.

"It is fitting," she concluded, "that this great message of healing shall go forth from the United States of America, the country that has sent forth her men to defend the defenseless."

Eugene Reybold—

Engineer Chief Is Master Builder Of the Army

This is another in a series of stories about the men who are running the war. The next will appear on Monday.

By Patricia Grady

His career is the military version of the from-office-boy-to-corporation-president saga.

Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, who spent his college summers working for the United States Engineers Office, holds the distinction of being the first non-West Pointer to fill the post of Chief of Engineers of the United States Army. This kindly, quietly forceful officer supervises all the construction work for the Army—camps, barracks, roads, bridges, airfields, depots, et al.—oversees the training of these technical troops and officers, sees to it that what his boys build is kept in tiptop shape.

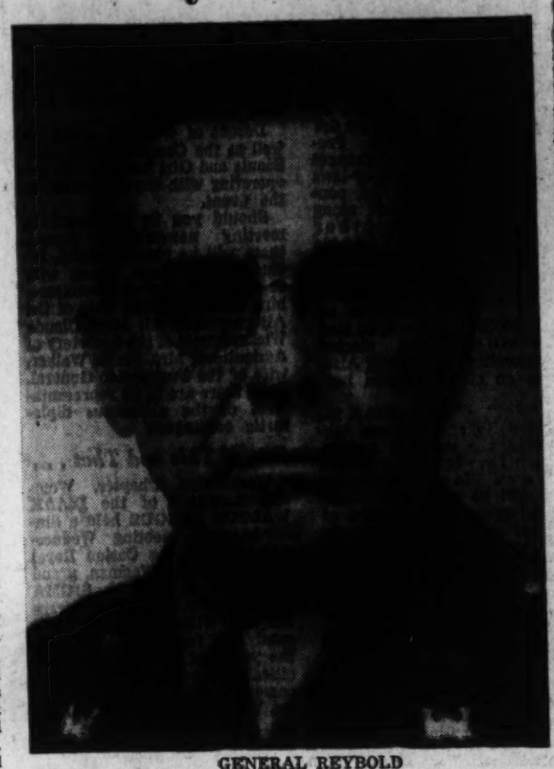
Sturdily built, a benign look in his eyes, that twinkle behind steel-rimmed glasses, General Reybold finds it hard to keep the pride out of his voice when he talks of what his corps has accomplished during our months of war. Army cities have mushroomed overnight in every part of the country, airfields have been hewn out of jungles and tamped down in far-flung deserts; front-line Engineers have cleared a path among the mine-fields for troops to advance — the Engineers have been hard at work on the home and battle fronts.

"We have had the military incentive to build a widespread system of transportation," he points out as he talks of the Alcan Highway. "The postwar possibilities are very interesting to think about. Of course, our corps couldn't have done its expanding job without the trained engineers and contractors who have come to us from civil life. Their training and experience have been invaluable."

Inspects Work of Corps

In his handsome, pine-paneled office in the new War Department annex on Virginia Avenue General Reybold has a staff that worships the ground he walks on. The office has the informal, friendly atmosphere of a Midwestern Main Street and a never-failing supply of gentle humor. "I used to always get three good laughs a day," observes this two-star general with the string of scientific degrees after his name. "Now I only get two."

Gregarious, an amusing conversationalist, the general has the suggestion of a drawl that can't be laid to his Delaware background. His service tours in Arkansas are probably the explanation. He's an expert at handling human beings, largely because of his open interest in people. He is much more of an interviewer than an interviewee.



GENERAL REYBOLD

The general is an astute technician, his interest focusing on the improvement, control and development of waterways and water resources. He checks into his office before 8 o'clock every morning and usually leaves his desk about 7. Rising with the dawn is not his pleasure, but there's a job to be done. He doesn't mind the long day and gets his rest on trips through the country and out of it. There are few American battlefields that General Reybold hasn't glimpsed, and he's satisfied by what he's seen.

The general's favorite pastime is collecting antiques. He goes in more for prowling than for auctions. His collection of prints, furniture and glassware has been picked up in all parts of the country, with the emphasis on Arkansas. Tales of how he found some of his pieces are his most enthusiastic conversational subjects. He loves to "come on" things, such as by dropping into a farmhouse to pass the time of day and coming out with a paint-hidden antique cabinet.

All-Service Family

Time was when General Reybold prided himself on his golf. He used to be able to beat his son, Frank, now a lieutenant colonel, recently assigned to Washington. To make it an all-service family, his daughter, Elizabeth, married Paul Yount, the much-publicized lieutenant colonel who has been directing the building of the Trans-Iranian Highway.

General and Mrs. Reybold live in an apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel—their antiques packed away in Little Rock, Ark. She has such a busy life that the general doesn't attempt to keep up with her activities. Red Cross work is on her must list.

Served in Philippines

Born in Delaware City, Del., General Reybold attended schools in his native city and entered the engineering course at the University of Delaware. Before graduating in 1903, he had put in several summers of work at the United States District Engineers Office in Wilmington and Philadelphia and on graduation took over a full-fledged job with the same outfit. He took competitive examinations for a commission in 1908 and came out a second lieutenant.

For three years, from 1910 to 1913, he served as constructing quartermaster and aide to the commanding general in the Philippines and was then assigned to the coast defenses of Boston Harbor. For his World War I record as director of the department of enlisted specialists at Fort Monroe, Va., he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal.

General Reybold was graduated from the Command and General Staff School in 1923, followed by three years as an instructor there. In 1926, he was transferred to the Corps of Engineers and upon graduation from the Army War College in 1927 he became assistant to the District engineer, and later district engineer in Buffalo.

Following tours of duty in Washington, Wilmington and Little Rock, the general was chosen to run the supply section of the General Staff in 1940, and in October of 1941 took over his present post.

Will You Ride in My Spider— Or to the Races We Will Go

Society Went to Benning Forty Years Ago in Some Odd Conveyances

By Marie McNair

Today you get to the races via subway, train or by grace of the OPA. The gas ban, the rubber shortage have both taken their toll from one of the greatest sports and most flourishing enterprises in the world.

"Closed for the duration" hangs up outside several of the tracks which were unfortunate enough to be built off the beaten path. On the other hand Jamaica, Belmont, etc., report a larger business than ever, what with defense money filling the pockets of more workers on the employed list than this country has known in many years.

But the racing picture is totally different in this era of prosperity in a modern world. Think back to the turn of the century if you can—or dare. It was a day of elegance for the lover of the sport. No special trains then to carry you right to the track. No jostling by heavy jowled professional gamblers, cigar-chewing touts, "con men," ladies with more time than money to spend. Those were the days when the objectives of racing meant competition in fine horse flesh and encouragement in the development of the breed.

Those were the days, too, when one "tooled" out leisurely to nearby Benning from the old Shoreham Hotel at Fifteenth and H Streets, or the Chevy Chase Inn, in a "spider" phaeton, a drosky, complete with liveried groom, or a public coach driven by the owner himself.

Jockey Club to Elevate Racing

A mellowed clipping from a Washington newspaper devoted four columns to "What Is Good Form," by Pauline Pry, columnist of the Gay Nineties. Here is what she says, in part: "The Washington Jockey Club proposes to elevate racing. As the matter now stands at the tracks across the Potomac and in the District generally, racing has become a vulgar device of gamblers, and the horse, poor thing, in addition to the sorrows he must know in consequence of being left behind in this age of bicycles and electrical motor contrivances on the turf, has suffered the indignity of being reduced to a mere wheel in the unlawfully manipulated machine of pool selling."

"Good form" at the races was a matter to be taken with utmost seriousness. For instance, Miss Pry informs her readers that the "ultra proper stuff" for a woman to clothe herself in for the races is Melton cloth or Bedford cord, which, it goes without saying, should be strictly tailor-made.

And a gentleman driving a four-in-hand MUST have his gloves unbuttoned and turned up at the wrists. It's a matter of artistic appearance, says Miss Pry, anent good form, and it is also grounded in reason, for thus the muscles of a man's hand have free play.

No Mustache For Coachman

"To be perfectly good form," continues the arbiter of the day, servants should be forced to sacrifice their mustaches and any other hirsute adornment, however dear, and if your coachman would exactly preserve the dignity and discharge of duty of his position, he should be able by means of whip signals to so convey warning of his movements to anything behind him that he may turn without a collision and without ever moving his head to look back of him."

The late Mrs. Henry May, whose son, Henry May, and daughter, Mrs. Harry M. Black, still call Washington home, was a familiar figure at the race tracks in her "spider," and again quoting Pauline Pry, "the footman mounted behind, wearing stiff-legged boots, a high hat, and coat to match the upholstery."

Hugh and Alex Legare favored a buckboard which could accomodate seven to nine friends. "A very jolly vehicle" according to the columnist, "for taking large parties to the races. The groom who sits behind this particular vehicular fancy is properly dressed in white "cords" with a square-topped pot hat."

Frederick Bugher, whose widow has forsaken Washington for Florida, tooled out to Benning in a drag; Clarence Moore, whose home on Massachusetts Avenue is now the Canadian Legation, drove a public coach. A most skillful whip, the late Mr. Moore was determined that Washington be aroused to interest in coaching such as was manifest in Philadelphia and New York. The late Woodbury Blair used a gig—a two-wheeled cart built for two, and Oliver Belmont's cocking cart was something to make eyes turn. Drawn by two horses in tandem it was a high two-wheeled vehicle with the groom's box behind.

One Summer's Romance

BY RITA HANSEN

CHAPTER XVII

Standing in the wings, Lisa heard with swift beating heart, the thunderous applause at the end of the first act. She should be glad for Johnny. So far it was a success, solidly. Her first entrance was in the second act. A whole act for build-up for Jenne and then that first fateful entrance. She listened as the lines became familiar, leading with relentless sureness to her cue.

Her leading man came off and patted her absently on the shoulder. "Ralph," she whispered, panic tightening her throat. "I can't talk. I'm sick—my throat, it's all stuck!"

He grinned and clipped her chin lightly. "That means you're an actress. Everybody gets that. Wait'll you get out there, honey. You'll knock 'em dead. And, by the way, don't forget to go around back of the sofa so you don't block me the way you did yesterday."

She nodded mutely. The enormity of what she was doing struck her with force. She didn't belong here; it was wrong. Her throat was burning up and she couldn't sand up without holding something. How could she possibly go out in front of the most sophisticated first-night audience in the world—she, Lisa Alden, from a farm on the Feather River! She felt herself turning instinctively, trying to run away from the bright stage.

Then there was a voice in her ear. "You're on, honey. Go to it." And Ralph's hands guides her forward. She moved out, feeling, like a blow, the battery of colored lights and concentrated stares. And then she remembered her first speech and heard her voice saying it, high and reedy. "I've been for a walk, but it's very dark out. I was afraid."

From then on she moved in a haze of unreality, anxiety and just plain misery. "I can't do it," her brain kept saying, "I can't go through with it—I'm not doing it the way I should!" And it was eternity until the third-act curtain.

The curtain calls were the worst of all. She felt ridiculous, standing in a line, smiling—bowing. And then they gave her a solo bow and brought out a huge bouquet and everybody applauded while she held the flowers and felt sick.

When it was over and she could leave the stage at last she found crowds all the way to her dressing room, all smiling, all saying nice, polite, complimentary things. She couldn't help feeling better, although she knew she hadn't done well. Everything she had learned at rehearsal had been forgotten when she stepped on the stage.

Johnny was in her dressing room. He kissed her and said, "Congratulations. Good job, darling." She wanted to say, "Was it really, Johnny? Tell me, don't act! I want to know really!" but all she said was, "You're the one taking the honors. They love your play, Johnny!"

She didn't see him again 'til she arrived with the rest of the cast at a penthouse first night party. Then she only caught sight of him for a moment, across the room, for she was whirled away to dance, and smile at a line of old ladies who told her how pretty she had been.

Then through the crowd she saw Symie and Johnny talking together. They walked out to the terrace where some of the people were dancing on an outdoor dance floor. She broke away and ran after them, but it was dark outside and hard to see anything after the brilliance of the room. She moved around a corner, stumbling over the feet of a couple who were sitting on a bench. Then, at the far corner of the roof, away from the crowd, she saw two shadowy white dinner jackets and a flash of silver that she knew was Julie.

When she heard Johnny's laugh, ringing across the night air, it was a stab of pain. She had to know what they were talking about. For the first time in her life she deliberately set out to eavesdrop, to hear what they were saying before they saw her. Even as she moved forward, keeping close to the shadowy wall, she hated herself for what she was doing. But a desperate, gnawing fear made her keep on and brought her into the range of their voices. Johnny was talking.

"But how was I to know she'd freeze in front of an audience. She was wonderful sometimes at rehearsals . . . and you've got to admit, she's the type."

"Johnny boy," Symie said patiently, "An amateur is an amateur. What can you expect? All the time I could have told you it would happen"

So it was that bad! She wanted to run then, but the same nagging misery kept her there to hear more.

Julie said, "Poor Johnny, it's such a lovely play What are you going to do,darling?"

"Darned if I know!" he laughed. "Looks like you'll get the part after all, honey—so all your scheming is going to work out."

"Johnny!" she said reproachfully poutingly.

"I know. You don't fool me very much, my gorgeous hussy, I bet you could step into the part tomorrow night!"

"'Course I could, Johnny." Her laugh was very low and in the darkness. Lisa clenched her hands into hard hot fists. Feeling the heavy ring, she pulled it off with a furious gesture.

Symie said, "Well, let's put her in the part tomorow then. It'll save the play, Johnny. Julie can do it—she should have done it all along. I said from the beginning . . ."

"Oh shut up, Symie. We can't just throw the poor kid out. Let her play it a week—then I'll think of some way of letting her down easy."

"A week!" Symie moaned. "And such a hit it might have been!"

Julie said, "What about the papers, Johnny, the critics'll roast her ears off—and yours too."

"I know," he said wryly, "I can see the kind of story they'll dream up, knowing about Lisa and me." He scratched his head frowningly. "We can't let her see the papers, yet how are we going to keep them away from her. I don't know what to do!"

"A mess," Symie intoned. "You always can find a mess to get into. Playwrights—such a headache should happen to someone else——"

Pleasure Driving Ban Will Return Picnics To Back Yards

Now that the warm days are here and the good old summertime will soon be with us, we will have the urge to get to cool spots. The cool spots won't be dashing down to the beach to take a plunge or relax on the sands. Such spots as the Poconos or other lovely cool mountain retreats will also have to be in our dreams. We will have to relax and watch the clouds sail by from our own back yards since OPA has announced there is to be strict enforcement of the ban on pleasure driving.

This will be the year to do our out-door living at home. If back yards have never been appreciated or made attractive before they certainly will be now. Well-trimmed hedges, shade trees, blooming flowers and all such offerings of nature will make back yards a haven.

Barbecues were a trend before war days. But now that we will stay at home, it seems that some sort of a cooking or picnicking spot is almost a must. In fact the barbecue is really a great aid in summer housekeeping. But if it is not possible or practical to have cooking facilities in the back yard, then you can cook in the kitchen and carry it out to the yard.

Picnic food too will have to be different than in normal times. When a child, I considered a week in the summer without a picnic was a terrible experience. Always we had fried chicken, potato salad, deviled eggs and bananas. No picnic was complete without these foods. Well the potato and the banana have almost become oddities. Fried chicken of course is easier to obtain—but, not too easy if you don't indulge in the black market.

We will just have to consider other foods to eat at our out-door gatherings. Chopped meat for hamburgers and meat loaves, frankfurters, baked beans, crisp salads, and many other foods are on the "right" list of foods, so we can make out with appealing food.

A pot of baked beans, steaming hot is a highlight at any picnic. This is possible when you can carry them from the stove to the back yard. And beans for baking are showing up in a new, interesting and helpful form. You no longer have to know 24 hours ahead of picnic time, to be able to serve baked beans.

Backyard picnics are fun. Whether you cook the food over a portable grill, in an outdoor fireplace or carry it from the kitchen, it will be a delightful change to eat in picnic fashion. You can gain a reputation as a barbecue chef if you mix up hamburgers and spice them with a cleverly concocted barbecue sauce. The effect of good food will make the family forget they cannot wander to far places for diversions

Baked beans in half an hour! This column reported recently on the delicious quick-frozen baked beans now available. Now, there has appeared, beans so processed that sorting, soaking and long, slow baking of the legume is no longer necessary. This new bean produces food that will make your grandma, Aunt Lucy or any of the ones who made delicious baked beans by the tried and true 24-hour recipe, look to them with arched eyebrows.

A food organization in the Hoosier town of Indianapolis, is packaging precooked navy beans. All you do is to take your ration book to the grocer, give up three points and about 15 cents and you are well on the way to a pot of steaming, flavorsome baked beans. You can treat the precooked beans to any favorite recipe—New England style, baked with tomato sauce, bean soup. One package makes six servings. No long baking either to heat up the kitchen. The following is a recipe by which they may be made into the New England style.

BAKED BEANS

Fry 4 slices or ¼ pound sliced salt pork (not too crisp) in a pan large enough to accommodate all the ingredients. Remove the meat. Place 3½ cups water, 1 12-ounce package precooked, quick serve beans, ¼ cup molasses or brown sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper and 1 teaspoon dry mustard in the pan of bacon drippings and let come to boil. Boil slowly 10 minutes, covered, on top of stove. Then pour into baking dish, place bacon on top, bake 15 minutes with lid on in a very hot oven, 450 degrees. Remove lid and bake another 5 minutes. Serves six.

Meat loaf made by a recipe tuned to economy is also a food to consider for picnic service. This basic recipe can be varied by placing hard-cooked eggs through the center when making the loaf. Then when sliced the cut egg will make a golden center. The following recipe makes use of oatmeal as an extender:

OATMEAL MEAT LOAF

Combine thoroughly 1 pound ground veal, beef or lamb, or a mixture of these meats, 1¼ cups rolled oats (quick-cooking or regular, uncooked)), 2 teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon celery salt, ¼ teaspoon black pepper, 1 well-beaten egg, 1¼ cups milk, 1-3 cup catsup or tomatoes and 2 tablespoons chopped onion. Pack into a loaf pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 1 hour. Slice and serve warm or cold.

Or you might like to make a veal loaf. Using a cup of oats, a loaf which will serve 8 persons may be achieved with small amount of meat. Here is the recipe:

VEAL LOAF

Dissolve 1 bouillon cube in ½ cup boiling water and allow to cool. Combine with 1 pound ground veal, ¼ pound bacon, ground; 1 small chopped onion, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon celery salt, 1 teaspoon paprika, 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce, ½ cup catsup or tomato pulp and 1 cup quick or uncooked oats. Pack into a greased loaf pan. Brush with melted fat. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees) for one hour.

Crisp salads appease keen-edged appetites. Another advantage of eating picnic food in the back yard is that the salad can be taken from the refrigerator and served in all its frigid glory. Here is a recipe which combines vegetables and eggs:

EGG AND VEGETABLE SALAD

Shred 2 carrots, 1 small head cabbage and 1 small green pepper. Add ½ cup diced celery, 1 cup cooked peas and spicy French dressing. Toss together lightly. Fill lettuce cups with the salad. Garnish with 6 halved or sliced hard-cooked eggs.

Spicy French Dressing—Rub bowl with cut clove of garlic. Add 3 tablespoons vinegar or lemon juice, a few grains pepper, 3 drops Tabasco sauce, ¾ cup salad oil, ¾ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon paprika, ¾ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and 1½ tablespoons prepared horseradish. Remove garlic and beat dressing thoroughly before serving. Serves 6.

If you are going to make barbecued meat here are recipes for two kinds:

BARBECUE SAUCE

Sauce 1—Combine 1 cup water, ½ cup tomato catsup, 2 tablespoons pepper sauce, 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, ¼ teaspoon cayenne, and ¼ cup sliced onions.

Sauce 2—Combine 3 tablespoons vinegar, 4 tablespoons tomato catsup, 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, 3 bay leaves, 1 clove of garlic minced, 2 tablespoons onion chopped, 1 cup tomatoes skinned and chopped, or canned tomatoes, 2 ribs of celery with leaves, chopped, ½ lemon thinly sliced and 1½ cups water.

Variety in Eating

It is easy to get into a rut on meal-planning. You may be in one without knowing it. For example, do you serve the same vegetables over and over, or do you try different ones on the family? Unless you like and serve as many as six fresh vegetables and four fresh fruits, you are in a rut. There's an exception, however. The one vegetable you can serve every day is the green, leafy variety, either cooked or raw, for greens furnish the most minerals and vitamins of any vegetable. The greener the leaves, the better. Yellow vegetables are next best.

Eggplant Souffle Makes Splendid Vegetable Dish

Eggplant can be cooked in many ways—fried, broiled, scalloped, in fritters, stuffed and baked and made into souffle. An eggplant souffle is an excellent dish. Here is the recipe for making it:

EGGPLANT SOUFFLE

Cut an eggplant into halves. Scoop out the center, leaving a shell ¼ inch thick. Cook the pulp in 6 cups boiling salted water. Add ½ tablespoon vinegar to the water. When the pulp is tender, drain it and mash it with a fork. There should be about 1 cupful of pulp. Melt 3 tablespoons butter in a saucepan. Stir in 2½ tablespoons flour until blended. Stir in 1 cup milk slowly. When the sauce is boiling, add the mashed eggplant. Cook and stir it for 1 minute. Reduce heat and stir in 3 egg yolks. Stir and cook these ingredients for 1 minute to permit the yolks to thicken. Add ½ cup or less chopped nut meats, salt, if required, paprika and nutmeg. Cool these ingredients. Beat 3 egg whites until stiff. Fold them into the eggplant mixture. Fill the shells and bake them in a moderate oven, 325 F., until the souffle is set—about 30 minutes. A little water may be placed in the pan to keep the shells from scorching.

D. C. Planners Look Toward Postwar Era

The National Park and Planning Commission will meet this morning with the Fine Arts Commission and representatives of nine national organizations interested in the National Capital development, to discuss postwar development for Washington.

The progress of prewar planning and the changes and interruption caused them by the war also will be considered at the joint meeting. Specific points of the postwar program to be studied are the proposed changes in the 110-foot height zoning regulation suggested some time ago by the Park and Planning Commmision, and the locations of future statues and memorials in the District.

More Statues Sought

For all the insistence last fall that statues be melted down for armaments, the pressure (mostly congressional) for new statues and memorials has been unabated—perhaps even stimulated—by the war, a spokesman said.

Also to be considered today by the commission in executive meeting are a statement by Park and Planning Director Brig. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant on the Budget Bureau's reorganization study and current proposals for a District urban redevelopment bill.

This bill, authorizing postwar redevelopment of "blighted" areas in the city, would enable the District to obtain loans and grants from Congress for such projects or to raise the necessary funds on its own initiative.

Boundary-Line Problem

The questions of land acquisitions and boundary lines for the Indian Creek Parkway strip of the Anacostia River Parkway and for portions of the Suitland Parkway will also be presented for the commission's attention.

The terms of the agreement between the Park and Planning Commission, the National Capital Parks and the War Department on the division of the Fort Washington area for Army purposes and for the Maryland terminus of the George Washington Memorial Parkway will be revealed this afternoon.

Tomorrow morning will be devoted principally to analysis of the District housing problems as they are affected by growth and redistribution of population. The latest reports on the concentration of living and working places of Federal workers—with special emphasis on the 1100-employe General Accounting Office building at McLean Gardens—will be presented.

West Point Rites For Colonel Walker

Colonel Walker, a native of Craft, Tex., is survived by his wife, a daughter, Mrs. J. B. R. Hines, West Point, and a son, Maj. Charles P. Walker, a cavalry officer now overseas.

Funeral Today For Colonel Gray

Funeral services for Col. Alonzo Gray, United States Army, retired, who died Monday in Walter Reed Hospital, will be held at Fort Myer Chapel at 2 p. m. today. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Colonel Gray, who was 82, was a native of Wisconsin and was graduated from West Point in 1887. He retired in 1922. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. H. R. O'Dell, Ames, Ohio, and Mrs. R. B. Woodruff, Phoenix, Ariz.

Pearl Buck Urges Repeal of Chinese Exclusion Law

Urging repeal of the Chinese exclusion law, Pearl Buck, author of many novels about life in China, yesterday told the House Immigration Committee that to continue the law in effect is an "unwarranted test" of Chinese patience.

Repeal of the law, which has barred them from entrance into this country for more than half a century, is necessary as a war measure, she said, adding that the Japanese are using the exclusion act as part of their propaganda program in China.

"They are taunting the Chinese by telling them, 'Look, is America really your ally? You are being discriminated against,'" she said.

"All the Chinese know about the exclusion act," she said, "and don't think that when our soldiers go into China, as they will do when we are ready to begin our offensive against Japan, they won't be asked by the Chinese why it hasn't been repealed."

Stable World Prices Urged At Food Parley

By Ovid A. Martin
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hot Springs, Va., May 21.—A British declaration of support for an international policy of price stability caused talk at the United Nations food conference today of a postwar world-wide "ever-normal granary" system.

Richard K. Law, chairman of the British delegation, told a news conference that his country believed international action should be taken to eliminate wide fluctuations in prices of basic agricultural and nonagricultural products. Such fluctuation, he said, are in time equally ruinous to producers and consumers.

The ever-normal granary idea, calling for storing surplus crops, is aimed at assuring ample food supplies in years of short harvests as well as preventing price depression when crop surplues exist.

Food Shortage Predicted

Belief that the world faces a postwar period of short food supplies was expressed by Paul H. Appleby, Undersecretary of Agriculture and an American delegate, who told a press conference he thought the United States should prepare to continue food rationing for several years after the war.

It will be necessary, he declared, to send huge amounts of food to Europe for some time after hostilities cease. He added that there is "nothing to the idea" that the food conference is designed to provide this country with an opportunity to "play Santa Claus" on an international scale.

Law suggested no specific method or methods of bringing about and maintaining price stability. However, United States agricultural experts brought to the conference reports on the experience of this country in stabilizing domestic farm prices through the AAA, with it's "ever-normal granary" and commodity price-supporting loan features.

In a joint discussion with Law of the price problem, L. Robbins, economic secretary of the British war cabinet offices and a member of the delegation, emphasized that Great Britain did not favor price fixing but rather action which would keep prices from going too high or too low.

It may be necessary, Robbins said, to establish an international organization to handle the price problem.

Whether the conference will go so far as to suggest a method of establishing price stability was uncertain. Heads of several delegations have urged that the conference limit it's recommendations to general principles, leaving the question of determining ways and means to future discussions.

Editor Sees No Radical Trend in FSA

By the United Press

Any belief that there are "subversive tendencies and communistic trends" in the Farm Security Administration is "utterly without basis of fact," Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, declared yesterday.

He testified before a House Agriculture Subcommittee today which has been studying the organization with a view, as Chairman Cooley (Democrat) North Carolina, said, of preserving its good features but eliminating those which may be found objectionable.

"If mistakes were made," in the early days of the program, McGill said, "let's profit by them and not destroy FSA.

"The chief trouble with its program today is that we are skimping its funds when we should be expanding it to meet a critical combination of food shortages on the one hand and underemployment among small farmers on the other."

The actual increase in production by FSA farm families in Georgia alone is "astounding," he declared, adding that in 1942 milk production advanced 34 per cent, egg production by 2½ million dozen, and chicken production by more than 2 million pounds.

"The small farmer can make his best contribution to the war effort in the place where he is—on his own farm. And only through the FSA is the means made available by which the small farmer, through credit, guidance, instruction, marketing arrangements, can increase his production and do his part in the war program."

Representative Flanagan (Democrat) of Virginia, said the committee had no inclination to "tear down the whole program" but added that he was dubious over the collective farming aspects of the program—Government purchase of large tracts of land leased on a 99-year basis to farmers. He expressed anxiety lest this lead to "American serfdom."

"You wouldn't want to burn down a good barn just to get rid of a few rats," McGill said.

"No, but we're going to get rid of a few rats in this program," Flanagan answered.

New Strikes Are Reported in 13 Coal Mines

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

The War Labor Board yesterday headed toward reaching a final decision on the coal case by Tuesday as dissatisfaction in the coal fields brought strikes in 13 mines in three States employing 6000 workers.

WLB's special three-man panel was scheduled to complete work on its report to the board by the weekend.

The mines are operating under an extended truce arrangement between John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, and Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, Government operator of the mines. The truce is scheduled to expire by midnight, May 31.

Court Action Hinted

There were no indications yesterday that Lewis would pay any more attention to a board order designed to settle the case than he has paid to board instructions extending present contracts and ordering him to appear before it. On the contrary, it was learned that Lewis is in possession of a legal brief which contends that WLB action forbidding the mine operators to negotiate with Lewis until he appears before the WLB is in violation of the Wagner Act. There was speculation yesterday that Lewis might be contemplating court action to enjoin the WLB from deciding the case.

It was learned last night that the U. M. W.'s application for reaffiliation with the A. F. L. was accompanied by a check for $60,000 for payment of dues. It was not clear whether this was intended to cover an entire year's dues, or only part of a year.

A majority of the board's panel was reported to favor granting Lewis a compromise payment for time used traveling underground to the miner's "working place," so-called "portal-to-portal" pay. Whether the board would receive such a recommendation was uncertain since the board had instructed its panel to "stick to facts" in making its report.

Meanwhile, Ickes indicated that he was now following a "hands off" policy with respect to the labor aspects of the coal dispute.

"They'll Keep Their Word"

Asked to comment on the coal strikes, Ickes said that less than 1 per cent of production was affected.

"They'll keep their word (the truce agreement)," Ickes said. "They always have."

Altogether 11 Government-operated pits in Pennsylvania and one each in Ohio and Kentucky were closed by miners who expressed dissatisfaction with delays in handling the case, the Associated Press reported.
